Victory Over Tendler in Return Match Will Boost Sailor's Stock and Place Him in Limelight Next to Champion Leonard

By ROBERT W. MAXWELL Sports Editor Evening Public Ledger

SOLLY FRIEDMAN, the jolly tar from the Middle West, is training hard and faithfully for his eight-round battle with Lew Tendler next Monday night. This is nothing strange or unusual, because boxers always get themselves in perfect physical shape before swapping wallops with gentlemen who are following the same line of work. They also train hard and faithfully,

However, some battles are more important than others, and this approaching scrap is one of these things. Friedman has the chance of a lifetime to step into the front rank of lightweights and gain everlasting fame and fortune. And the Sailor does not care much for fame.

There is a reason for calling this contest important. For years we have been looking at top-notch lightweights and grew familiar with all of them. They never changed. Leonard, the champion, stood supreme, with Lew Tendler, Johnny Dundee, Willie Jackson, Joe Welling, Ritchie Mitchell and Pete Hartley as contenders. Leonard walloped all of these with the exception of Tendler, and Tendler socked everybody except Leonard. Therefore Lefty Lew became the one and only contender for the title.

However, these top-liners have been boxing a long time and are putting on a lot of age. They can't go on forever, and already some are on the slippery skids. Dundee still is good, but not so good as a couple of years ago. Jackson also is slipping, and in another couple of years they will be ready for retirement or the discard. Therefore the time is ripe for a new crop of lightweights and the successful newcomers will cop the kale.

Friedman is the most promising of the recent crop. Up to the time he met Tendler last month he was just an ordinary fighter; nor good and not He gave Lew a hard tussle, almost ruined him in the last few rounds and made such a hit that he was rematched with the southpaw. That caused the battle on next Monday night.

The Sailor will go into this battle with more confidence than ever before. He figures be can trim Tendler and does not hesitate to say so. He knows that a victory will boost him in the boxing game and place him in the front rank next to Leonard. It is almost certain that the champion will give him a chance to win the title if he scores a knockout or wins the newspaper decision. For that reason Friedman has everything to gain and nothing to lose, Solly arrived here a week ago to train for the bout. He takes a long run through Fairmount Park every morning and in the afternoon boxes with several sparring partners at Philadelphia Jack O'Brien's gymnasium. He is working harder than if the championship was at stake, and already is nearly down to the required weight.

BOXERS step into the picture, linger for a time and then step out.

Their places are taken by younger men, and it looks as if Solly Friedman, aged twenty-two, was knocking at the door. He wants to get in, and doesn't care whose place he takes.

Everybody Is Playing Golf

GOLF is becoming so popular that the courses are becoming crowded and players are finding it difficult to avoid the congestion. This not only is true of this country, but also in foreign lands. Everybody is playing the game now, and in India the Rajahs and other gents have taken hold with zest

One day a golfer in Bombay was out on the course and stymied by a fussy foursome. This quartet sang songs, told stories, had a hilarious time and refused to allow the impatient followers to go through. After this a rigid set of rules was drawn up and posted in conspicuous places. They are very broad-minded over there, but have a look and decide for yourself. The rules

1. Never drive until the players in front are off the green. The hole may be 500 yards long and your best drive 80, but it makes a good impression on any spectators

2. Don't hurry off the greens. Try that putt again, mark up your card, explain why you foozied your approach. Remember you have paid your dues and the greens are yours. 3. Walk slowly. Golf is a leisurely, dignified game, and, after all, time was made for slaves. That group on the tee behind must have been hurrying and are probably hot and excited. Let them learn their lesson to be leisurely and to exercise more self-control. 4. Don't get obsessed by the game. Foursomes particularly are made for pleasant social intercourse, and while you are settling whose turn it is to play or the caddies are looking for a mislaid ball, intersperse the seriousness of the game with merry quip and gibe. Singing a popular song also is permissible. The players behind you don't own the links; remember, they are

5. If you lose your ball it's hard luck. Search thoroughly, because it cost money. Be blind and deaf in regard to the couple behind. They are not through until you wave. Let them share in your grief. 6. Remember, rules are made by fools for wise men to break.

THE next rule is very important. After faithfully observing all of the rules and regulations, the player is advised to approach the clubhouse carrying a heavy niblick in his hand. Also to hire a body-

How John Reid Fixed a Golf Club

DEAR SIR-I read with interest your article on John Reid last week. I think one of the funciest things I ever heard about this eminent golf tutor was a conversation between Mr. Reid and a friend of mine at the Scranton Country Club. This friend, who has a habit of hanging on to his golf clubs until they fall apart and are no earthly use to any one, had a driver of a very old vintage, and the shaft through the numerous seasons had become considerably warped and bent out of shape.

One day after completing a round with this club he became convinced that it needed some repairs. Handing it to Reid, he said: "John, here is an old club and it is a good one. It needs fixing. What shall I do with it?" Reid took the club, looked it over carefully, squinted down the shuft, owung it a couple of times and after a sufficient pause to impress the answer upon his subject, said in his true Scottish accent; "Bur-r-rn ut?" H. B. GAYLORD.

PHILADELPHIA is the place where for orn hopes are patched up and sent away as good as new. Yesterday the New York Glants visited our hospitable city and played a double-header with our obliging Phils. Before they started they were three box scores behind the league-leading Pirates. When twilight began to fall and the customers slawly filed out of the park they were only one box score in accours. This is because only two games were played. Babe Ruth is in our midst again The demon slugger, walloper par excellence of the mystic order of swat ters will try to tie his record of last season on the lawn at Shibe Park this afternoon when the Athletics meet the Yankees in a three-game series.

Yesterday the Bustin' Bambine sent the sphere into the lap of a bleacherite over in Gotham for his fifty-second homer of the senson. Pennock, the former Mackman, was the victim of the Babe. On the last trip here the Babe smacked out two four-base plys and he might do it again this afternoon.

The Yankees continued their dast pennantward vesterday by taking both ends of a twin bill from the Red Sox. while Cleveland was winning one from the Tigers. This morning, according to the percentage table one full game sep-arates the two contenders. The submarine ball artist, Carl Mays, was responsible for the first game and Harry Harper, about who inuch has been written in this column, came through with his second victory in a week in the second contest.

In the first the Yanks were outhit, 2 to 9, but they managed to snare their bingles when they did the most good and as a result counted a sextette of runs, while the Red Sox were getting but two.

Harper had the sign on the Sox in the second fracas, holding them to six scattered hits while his teammates were making nine for seven runs off Pennock, including Babe Ruth's homer in the fourth inning with-one of his pals on the sacks.
