

Mrs. Wilson's Advice on Child's Diet Will Be Received Eagerly by Mothers

Various Ages Are Considered, and Each Meal Is Planned So That the Proper Amount of Nourishment Is Given

By MRS. M. A. WILSON. DURING the fresh fruit and vegetable season, the youngsters usually make tremendous strides in physical fitness and now that they have returned to school, the mother can, by careful planning, still keep these youngsters in the pink of condition. Children's diet should consist of large quantities of well-cooked vegetables, whole-wheat bread, fruits and cereal, with an abundance of milk and sweet creamery butter. Meat or its equivalent should be used once daily—at least that is the demand of the growing youth, yet if mother will, she can make so many varied and attractive dishes that will carry over greater food units than meat. Children will enjoy the nut and cereal meal, if it is nicely prepared. Each season has its own seasonal staples and the fall brings an abundant variety of the season's harvest. Plan to utilize these vitalizing foods while they can be purchased at their lowest prices. I believe in the Old World custom of giving the children their meals just giving the family has theirs. In many communities in New England today the custom of children's meals at the breakfast table is still part of the household regime. Pickles, spices or highly seasoned foods, seafoods, smoked meats, salt fish, sausages, such as sausages, cauliflower, chili and their ilk, have no place in the child's menu. Plan simple food nicely cooked and seasoned and then the children will be physically fit when the stormy winter days make it necessary to keep them indoors a good portion of the day. An appetizing menu for the family of three children about two, six and ten years of age:

- Breakfast: Fruit—About three tablespoons for small child and large amount for the older. Baked apples, peaches, apricots, apple sauce, oranges, stewed raisins and eggs for variety. Cereal—Three tablespoons for small child and one cupful for two older children. Well-cooked oatmeal, cream of wheat, barley and cream of wheat, cracked wheat, cereal, corn mush. One cup each of best grade of milk. Toast and cocoa for two other children. Personally, I prefer to use a mixture of equal parts of cream and milk for the morning cereal. The fat in the cream variety, which is used in the direction of the breakfast and this prevents the child from feeling hungry in an hour or so. Children should have a recess about 10:30 to the morning and a bit to eat at this time. The mother who is safeguarding her children will not give them pennies, or permit them to buy cheap sweets. Home-made sweets for children are both an economy in money and a safeguard to health. For this mid-morning meal, let the children have raisin, jelly, peanut butter, prune or coconut sandwich and string beans. Carrots, bread, spread liberally with a good dairy butter; an apple or a bit of home-made candy. For the Noon Meal: Soup—Celery, tomato, spinach, cabbage, cauliflower, turnip, carrot, rice, oatmeal and potato puree will afford cream varieties, which served in a finger width strips of nicely toasted whole-wheat bread. A macedoine of vegetables prepared in combination as follows: Carrots, turnip, string beans, Parsnips, cauliflower and string beans and string the beans and cut in half-inch pieces. Cook until tender in unsalted water and then dress with thick cream sauce and one tablespoon of butter for each child. Salt and pepper to taste, taking care not to overseason. Turn in a dish and sprinkle with grated cheese and brown slightly. Or just add one-half teaspoon of grated cheese for each child and serve without baking. Teach the child the habit of eating a salad daily; it may be just plain lettuce, celery shredded fine, cabbage,

The comfortable fashion of plaits in the trim skirt is made smart by having the striped design of the material go across instead of up and down, like that in the waist of pussywillow taffeta. Theodore Caldwell has become engaged to Jimmy Bond and to her surprise is not happy about it. She tells her employer, Richard Blakelee, that she is leaving to be married, and because he feels that she has no rights outside from his wishes, he kidnaps her and carries her off on his yacht, bound for a business trip in South America. Theo at first refuses to work and then a storm of seas brings her into more personal relations with Richard Blakelee, who, for the first time, sees her as a woman instead of an office machine. Theo feels that a business relationship must be re-established, and decides to give in to him, but a broken propeller carries the yacht out of its course and changes the plans of the trip. CHAPTER XXII A Man's Thoughts AFTER Theo had left him, Richard Blakelee stood for some moments by the railing. In all his life he had never felt toward a woman exactly as he felt toward this girl who had come into his life in such an amazing manner. Women had always been especially created for a man's lighter moments, and when he had not his own, he was pleased enough to marry some one like that, but it would never be disturbing. Theodore Caldwell disturbed him. She made him think of disturbingly. Certainly, he had never before thought intently of a woman's

By CORINNE LOWE. The high collar is the neck-remancer changing middle age to youth. In spite of this fact, the magician has no large following. Disregarding the famous example of Sarah Bernhardt, who for many decades has been wearing her throat in scarfs, the average American woman prefers her boat-shaped neckline without any softening influence. And, although a few high collars appeared this summer, the mode has never really taken with the mass of women.

The Boys Made Distances Short, But They Wouldn't Ever Walk Them

Cars Make a Day's Journey Last a Few Hours, but They Make a Walk of a Few Miles Too Long to Take on Foot

THE September sun was so hot when the family went up to the country for a little vacation that father proposed a swim one afternoon. The boys agreed enthusiastically, just what they had been thinking of themselves. Father began thinking over all the haunts of his youth to which he might take his boys and show them how they used to swim in his time. "I wish we could get over the river," he said regretfully. "But it takes too long. We'd have to start in the morning and take a lunch to go over there." The boys laughed. "Why, it only takes about a little over an hour to get there in a car, day or night, sometimes. If they were lucky, on bicycles or in a wagon. It took them almost all morning to get there, or so it seemed, and often, after a long swim, they would come home with a headache and find the family all through supper. And there he was going over it all in less than two hours, taking his swim, looking about a bit in the coolness that he always brings, keeping that coolness all the way home in the car, and arriving in time to tell it all before going in to eat the boys out!" It seemed like a miracle!

WHY they used to get up even earlier than usual, and hang around while their lunch was put up for them, then start off, sometimes on bicycles or in a wagon. It took them almost all morning to get there, or so it seemed, and often, after a long swim, they would come home with a headache and find the family all through supper. And there he was going over it all in less than two hours, taking his swim, looking about a bit in the coolness that he always brings, keeping that coolness all the way home in the car, and arriving in time to tell it all before going in to eat the boys out!" It seemed like a miracle!

THE next day was just as hot, and so father proposed another "swim-hole" in a dam not more than four miles from the house. They did walk that, scuffling up the dust with their feet, stopping to remember that it was here that this happened and that that had been an hour and all those fascinating stories of long, long ago when father was a boy. At last they reached the dam where they had another beautiful session, getting cool, giggling and drowning one another with impartiality and fervor. And then when they were dressed and started homeward again, father swung out into the same road he had traveled. "Oh, no!" exclaimed the boys.

This fall! Who shall say? All that we know is that quite a number of the early autumn modes are graced with high collars—aye, even ruffs. These modes include suits, notably the famous piletot styles of Lanvin, which are frequently finished with high collar.

Here we are presenting a dance frock with the overslip of black tulle veiling, the silver tissue of the frock continued into a plaited ruche held in place by a narrow band of black velvet turned loose. The frock is so frequently this fall depend sprays of rose and silver flowers.

A Cover for the Table. Are you planning a new table-runner this fall? If you are, you will welcome this one, for it does not take as much material nor require as much workmanship as the usual kind that runs the length of the table. You see, instead of a table cloth, you have a runner of this material, which is stretched across the middle of the table, and all the other things of the table are placed on top of it. The cover itself shows up very attractively. It is made of a tan linen, and each end has a design composed of an evergreen tree, standing in a square box, with a peacock facing it on each side. This is embroidered very simply and strikingly in French knots.

They Are Third Cousins Dear Cynthia—I have been going with a girl over a year and have been thinking of marrying her. Her parents have had me stop coming to her house to see her because I am a third cousin. I would like to know if you think there would be any harm in marrying her? ANXIOTS.

Marriage between first cousins is forbidden by State law, and some precedents have suggested the possibility of a third or fourth generation. It's a question that can be settled only by yourselves and your families, but third cousins are not a pretty distant relationship.

She's Too Indefinite Dear Cynthia—I wrote to you some time ago, but I did not get an answer, so I guess my letter got lost. Am coming to you again, but this time I met a fellow, who has been out a lot and whom I have been out with. He showed me a wonderful time. Three weeks ago he came to see me, and as he was leaving asked me to go and live with him for a night and I haven't seen any definite date. I haven't heard from him since and think that he's not being definite was the cause of it. I certainly would like to see him again, but he's a dandy chap. Would it be right to ask him to come out some time when some other come out to spend the evening? Please answer soon. ANXIOTS.

Mrs. Wilson's Answers

My Dear Mrs. Wilson—Kindly give me the reason why, when making jam, the jars are all treated alike, a few of them will not hold the preserving wax firmly. I never have that trouble when making jelly. After standing a few hours with the jars in a clear damp cloth and boiling wax is poured in and left untouched until the wax is hard. Does it harm the jam if the wax has not adhered firmly to the sides of the jars? MRS. E.

The cause of this is that the wax is too hot when poured over either the jam or jelly and in cooling shrinks. Just pour a little more wax around the jars and it will not hurt the jam if the jars are kept in a cool dry place.

Children invariably come home from school with the cry, "Mother, got any thing to eat?" Guests run in unexpectably in the afternoon, tea must be made, and then comes the dinner. The housekeeper who can find the time makes a goodly supply of jams and jellies to meet just such an emergency. A bit of apple jelly with roast lamb on a cold, snappy day. But those who cannot find time to make them themselves will be interested in some jams and jellies I saw displayed in one of the better food shops. There are all flavors—the jellies sell for thirty-five cents and forty cents and the jams for fifty cents and fifty-five cents.

Read Your Character

By Digby Phillips. Fine Eyebrows. There are two points by which you judge fine eyebrows: the fineness of the hairs and the slenderness of the eyebrows themselves.

Among the ladies, it is whispered, there are those who assiduously simulate the slenderness of shape by extracting the growth beyond the predetermined limits.

But while this may prove a desire to look well in the eyes of others, that's all it does prove. For the thickness of the hair cannot be disguised from a keen eye.

Fine-haired and finely shaped eyebrows denote a certain delicacy or sensitiveness in both men and women, which may be extreme enough to be labeled a fault or not, according to the degree to which this indication is checked and balanced by others, and according to the person's understanding of himself or herself.

As a rule such people are neither rough nor rugged physically, and you'll only find them so mentally when the evidence of the eyebrow is flatterly contradicted by several other characteristics. Even in this case the indication of the eyebrow modifies the contradictory characteristics.

Culture and a keener sense of differentiation is a mark of people with fine eyebrows. As manual workers they're more likely to be cabinetmakers than structural carpenters. Where their work is mental it will be marked by keenness and accuracy rather than by sheer driving power. In the boxing ring they have a shade of speed and scientific cleverness rather than mere sluggish ability.

Through a Woman's Eyes

By JEAN NEWTON. Echoes. Many years ago, in a picturesque little village, a couple with two children and the husband's parents lived together in a small house. The grandmother and grandfather lived in the attic, but they never complained, and all got along very well together. Of course, the old couple never stayed downstairs when there was company, but nobody seemed to notice that.

In those days china plates were very expensive—quite a luxury. In this family had only four. So grandmother and grandfather ate from wooden plates.

One day the mistress of the house went out into the yard and found her young son working diligently with his small tools, shaving off and shaping some pieces of wood. She asked him what he was doing, and he said, "I'm making your wooden plates."

"Oh, I'm making your wooden plates," said the boy. "My wooden plates?" "Yes, mother," while he continued to work. "The wooden plates for you?"
