Nancy Wynne Talks of the Frocks Seen at the Tennis. She Tells of Many Cretonne Gowns—Sullivan-Wright Marriage at Cathedral

SOMEHOW I can't think of a thing but clothes these days. And really if you have been out at Manheim this week for the tennis, you will not blame me. For, aside from the interest in the wonderful playing, the gowns are so pretty that you can get an afternoon's entertainment out of looking at them.

To be sure, it is not like the Horse Show, where many walk around the oval and you get a full view of the frocks; but, even so, I have seen this week enough handsome dresses to do me for many a day.

ON TUESDAY I saw Mrs. John B. Thayer, looking too attractive. She is a beautiful woman, and time seems only to increase her loveliness. Is it any wonder that Peggy and Polly are both so pretty in their two ways, with their lovely mother before them? Mrs. Thayer was wearing black as usual, and her simple frock was fashioned of organdie, made with tucks in the skirt and a rather plain bodice. Her picture hat of black georgette was trimmed with wheat of the same somber hue. Polly Thayer, who certainly looks none the worse for her glorious visit to the J. Y. Stewart Camp in Wyoming, was strolling about the grounds another day in a light blue dress of cretonne design.

CRETONNE frocks seem to have become the rage in the last month or so, and I for one hope they stay for the type of girl they suit, for they are certainly lovely. It is a slip-on model, usually without sleeves, you know, and you wear it over a white waist. It's cut straight round at the back of the neck and is V shaped in front. It's all in one piece, straight up and down, and is held in at the waist with a narrow belt. Most of the frocks I have seen are fashioned of a cretonne with a dark background.

One that was especially smart had a black ground, leaves in autumn colors, and the pattern had great bunches of bright yellow roses all through it at intervals. The frock was bound with black satin ribbon. But, bless your heart, you don't need to have ribbon; a soft black batiste will do as well. I saw Eleanor B—— buying some black batiste to finish her armholes and neck with the other day, and when she wore the dress later in the evening it was simply dear.

The dark patterns will make nice house dresses for the winter, it strikes me, for you do not like to wear a warm dress once you are home to stay. Our houses are mostly too warm for heavy dresses, and these are so dainty and pretty and becoming I believe they will be much in vogue.

DID you know that Hannah Wright and Upton Sullivan are to be married on the 15th of October? The date is out and I understand the invitations will be, too, very soon. They are to be married in the Cathedral at noon. Hannah has become or is about to become a Catholic, you see, and so they will be married in church. I suppose from the fact of their going to the Cathedral Cardinal Dougherty will officiate, though Upton's brother, Father James Sullivan, has married the other members of his family so far. Ruth, you know, was married in June, but her wedding could not be in church, as she was a Catholic and Mr. Sherman a Protestant, so they were married in the rectory of St. Patrick's Church and Father Sullivan officiated.

Upton and Hannah live within a stone's throw of each other. You know Hannah is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Megargee Wright, of 1903 Walnut street, and Upton's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Jeremiah J. Sullivan, live at 1910 Walnut street, a little further up in the block and on the other side of the street.

I'll warrant the wedding will be a beautiful affair, for Hannah is very good looking and her mother has some lovely and rare old lace, which I am sure will be employed on the wedding gown. I remember Hannah and Margaret wearing some of the lace at the Victory Ball several years ago, when so many wore lovely old-fashioned costumes.

I CERTAINLY digressed from the tennis, did I not? But I must tell you I saw Mary Glendinning out there on Tuesday, looking perfectly dear in a white silk jersey skirt and blouse and a semi-sports hat of white grosgrain ribbon embroidered in dark blue braid. I had not seen Mary since she returned from South America, where she and her parents spent several weeks. They came home about a month ago and had a wonderful trip.

JUNIOR had been staying a fortnight at the hotel and had sat at the same table in the dining room with the future debutante for most of that time. He, who was twelve years of age, was muchly taken with the pretty girl, and his eyes scarcely left her face. One day he heard her tell her mother that she just loved coffee ice cream. Now it happened that Junior loved it, too, but somehow or other he loved the debutante more. So when coffee ice cream appeared on the menu in a few days he asked for it for himself. When it was brought to him he said to his mother, "Give that to Miss Helen. I don't want any today and she loves coffee."

Mother saw through the sacrifice, but said nothing about it, only answering, "Don't you think it would be nice to offer it to her yourself?"

"Oh," said Junior, much flurried and embarrassed, "I—er—I haven't been introduced to her, ye know."

NANCY WYNNE.

SOCIAL ACTIVITIES
