"In justice to myself, Miss Caldwell." Richard Blakeslee's voice broke in on her thoughts. "I must refute some of the things you have said. I do it because I don't want you to think too harshly of me. It's quite true that I have always had what I wanted, that I even thought I might win you. But there's one thing you haven't taken into consideration, and that is my love for you. If I have wanted things in the past, inanimate things that have hardly counted, and taken them, do you think it likely that I will stand aside now and let another man win you away from me?"

Renovating Serge

Renovating Serge

Serge can be cleaned successfully by using a lye composed of about seven quarts of soft water and two ounces of the best soft soap. These quantities, of course, can be modified. First of an dissolve the soap over the fire, and then divide the lye thus formed into two vessels. To one of these, add a teaspoonful of ammonia for each quart of lye. The woolen material must be entered at a heat which the hand cannot hear; consequently, it will have to be turned about with smooth wooden sticks. Press the goods out as much as possible, and transfer to the second lye, containing no ammonia. This is cool enough to put the hands into, but be careful not to wring the material. When sufficiently washed, press between three or four soft, dry towels till the latter no longer become wet.
