

PLAN TO UNITE N. Y. TRANSIT LINES, WITH CITY AS OWNER

Consolidation Appears Certain, as State Board Has Required Power
 New York, Sept. 30.—(By A. P.)—Early consolidation of all New York City transit lines into one municipally owned system appeared certain today, following the issuance last night by the State Transit Commission of its final report on plans for a readjustment of transit management.
 The commission is vested with authority to put its decisions into effect, despite opposition from the companies involved or the city administration. Only a repeal of the law, or its upset in the courts can block their plans. Little opposition is expected from the companies involved.
 The commission announced it would begin shortly a series of public inquiries at which officials of the companies will be examined, and any persons opposing the plan be given a hearing. Following these hearings, the commission will announce its final plan, which will be run by three corporations, all under a central Board of Control. One of the corporations would operate the subway and elevated lines in Manhattan and the Bronx; one the Bronx and one the elevated and surface lines in Brooklyn.
 The city would acquire ownership of the lines without expenditure by an amortization program.

SHE'S NO HOLMES, WATSON
 Nurse Finds Stolen Gems by Common, Not Uncommon, Sense
 Miss Elizabeth Hillis, a professional nurse, of 212 West Washington square, says it was just "plain common sense," not detective instinct, that enabled her to recover some of the antique jewelry that was stolen from her home about a month ago.
 "I knew," she said, "that there were a lot of smelting places in this neighborhood, and I figured that the thief would probably sell my things to an antique dealer or cheap jewelry shop. Although I had detectives from City Hall on the case, I decided to keep an eye open because I knew what my things looked like and they didn't."

"And sure enough, I was walking past a shop, and there was one of my pins in the window. I discovered three other pins in there, too. The detective had done splendid work and I have about twelve of my pins back. My watch and several incidental pieces are missing, but I expect to get them back very soon."
