From Understudy to World Series Hero Is Mike McNally, Third-Base Substitute for Frank Baker

STEAL OF HOME BY MIKE M'NALLY PUTS HIM IN HERO CLASS

Giants Are Demoralized When Yankees' Youngster Outsprints Phil Douglas' Throw to the Plate in Fifth Inning—Carl Mays Is Unbeatable

By ROBERT W. MAXWELL

Sports Editor Evening Public Ledger New York, Oct. 6. IN A World Series—that is, a private and exclusive World Series, such as is now being held here in New York—it sometimes is difficult to reach into the crowd and pick out in advance some worthy gent who deserves to be called a hero. The laurel wrenth is likely to fall haphazardly and land on anybody's alabaster brow, and this idea furnishes the plot and the reason for today's Michael McNally is a hero. Yesterday he was just an ordinary guy carrying a spear and getting a speaking part when everybody else had left the stage. He was known as Frank Baker's substitute, who substituted so well that M. Huggins kept him in the cast from force of habit. Great things were not expected of him. He was in there to play third base, show a lot of speed on the defense, but when it came to socking the pill and scoring runs he wasn't even given a tumble.

But Michael refused to stick around and act as part of the scenery. He was in the biggest World Series held this year and wanted to make his presence felt. He did that very thing, but waited until the fifth inning to pull it. After he completed his act the Giants were on the verge of hysteria, they were demoralized, completely upset, and all that remained to be done was to shove over another marker to make the first victory of the series unanimous.

Here is how it happened: Michael was the first person to face Phil Douglas in the fifth feame, and Phil smiled a broad smile when he saw who was at the platter. He whizzed one at the plate and Michael whizzed it right back against the left field fence. Fast fielding kept the wallop down to a double, but that proved to be enough. A two-base hit from the sub third baseman was not to be sneezed at even in the fifth inning. It came as a sudden, stunning shock, and those things are serious.

McNally reached third when Schang sacrificed, and remained like a ship at anchor when Carl Mays missed a home can by three strikes. That made two out and Michael was all het up about it. He was well acquainted with the territory around third base because he played there, but this was Elmer Miller strolled to the platter, and Elmer's hitting average resembles the size of his Mackin. Every time he connects safely he declares a holiday. and it didn't look as if one of those things would be declared. Therefore, Mike decided to do something himself, alone and unaided. TAKING a long lead off third, McNally wotched Bouglas, and when I the big boy started to throw he dashed toward the home plate. The play was a big surprise and fooled every one, including Snyder and Douglas. Phil threw low and the ball reached the home plate when McNally slid in. Snyder made a clumsy attempt to tag the runner, but flopped. Mike seas safe, another run was hung up and from then on the Giants were through. One play put them to rout and the other four innings were superfluous.

Red Sox Curver Deserves Credit

CARL MAYS, who had been hurling in great form, became more effective U the other Yanks became more confident and with that combination the Giants didn't have a Chinaman's chance.

McNally made history in a World Series, but not a record. According to the heavily hearded dopesters who have the facts and figgers down pat. Ty Cobb stole home on Vic Willis in 1909 and also got four hits in a single game. But more of that later. Right now, allow us to state that H. H. Frazee owner of the well-known and often-mentioned Red Sox, of Boston, deserves a vote of thanks, for he won a World Series game by proxy. Ruth, Mays, McNally and Schang were the important guys in the initial victory, and what would have happened to the Yanks had Harry refused to sell them! We shudder to think of what would have happened.

Mays shares some of the glory with Michael because he was in his very best underhanded form. The National Leaguers could do nothing with the underslung delivery, and of the five hits collected during the afternoon, Frisch connected with four. The other came when Johnny Rawlings-also of Boston and Philadelphin-rapped to right in the seventh and perished on the sacks. Therefore, the hits meant nothing because they were widely spread and thinly mattered.

Babe Ruth did not do so well. He stepped into the picture in the first reel and drove in Elmer Miller with a rousing rap to center. After that he walked once and the next two times whiffed ingloriously. Bambino did not take the observations of Umpire Rigler in a kindly manner, especially on called strikes. He sneered openly when he walked to the neach, as if to say the guesser behind the platter was a burn, or words to that effect

Frank Frisch, of course, was the large noise of the Jints. He was the only one who could hit Mays and his fielding could not be improved upon. In fact, he was the life of the party.

NOW that we have disposed of the important persons, allow us to dwell upon the first footle of the series, which is a way of referring to a bone-headed play.

Bob Meusel Is the "Hero"

MR. ROBERT MEUSEL, brother of Irish, starred in this scenario as nobody has starred before. He proved to the vast assemblage that a three-base bit can mean nothing—not even a bingle in the base-hit column.

Robert performed in the sixth, and his net was well worth observing.

Peck was on second and Babe had just taken three swings. Therefore it was up to him to do something. He crashed one of Shufflin' Phil's twisters to the wall in left center, and Peck scored under wraps. Mensel tore around the bases and reached third. It was a great run after a great wallon, but neither meant a thing.

George Kelly, who plays first base, is a wise cracker. He watched Rob sprint around the sacks and, after third base was reached, he turned to George Moriarty and said : "George, that guy nin't touched first base yet. I gin't kickin' or anything like that, but rules is rules and we gotta live up to them. I'm gonna tag the

Kelly called for the ball and placed his hoof on the bag. 'Yer out.'" yelled Moriarity, and Meusel sheepishly walked to the bench to be congratulated by M. Huggins.

THE only reason the big right fielder is alive is because the bone, had no bearing on the game. Had the battle been close he would be clutching a lily in his left hand today.

Crowd Not So Large as Expected

For some reason or other the crowd way not so large as was expected. In fact, the turnout was mighty slim because the optimists made wild and weird guesses. They figured that the gates should be closed at 1 P. M. to every one except those holding reserved seat coupons. This was done, and about 8000 seats at $3.50 were unoccupied. The ball players let out a big. howl about this lack of patronage and said they would see that something

Bull players care nothing for the gate recepts in the first five games of the series. Neither do they care about their right arms or eyesight. Deep gloom hovered over each dugout when the ead news was spread. Today's game is likely to decide the series. McGraw made a good guess when he started Douglas against Mays yesterday, because with Carl in such good shape no team in the world could have trimmed him. Phil twirled a good game also, much better than was expected, but Jawn Jay evidently he would lose and refused to start his pitching are, meaning Ar Now comes the time when the star south paw must be inserted, and when this is being done, how about the Yanks? Who will they start? It looks very much like Hoyt, but some of the wise ones predicted early this morning before bedtime that Shawkey would be on the mound. In fact, some of the experts even went so far as to say they would pitch Bob of the Red Under-shirt if Huggins quit his job and asked for successors. However and be that as it may, Nehf is booked to start because it is according to the strategy of McGraw. May wants this game, and nobody can blame him for that. He has only Nehf to fall back on, with Toney in reserve for tomorrow. Then he will meet the third best pitcher on the Yankee staff and have a better chance to come through.

TUST the same, it is freely predicted that if the Giants lose today they will fold up as in the past and watch the procession go by. Still, you never can tell. Baseball is a peculiar game. If the Giants cop the guessing will begin all over again. Copyright, 1921, by Public Ledger Company

These are great days for the Penn vivania freshmen. They are having their own little World Series every afternoon out on Franklin Field with the xpesity as the party of the second part.
