The Critic Talks to Music Lovers

THE question which is probably A arousing the most interest in the musical world at present is "who will be the successor of Enrico Caruso as the world's premier tenor?" After the parts, such as Elenzar in "La Juive" passing of an artist supreme in any line, this question is always discussed, regardless of the fact that it is utterly impossible for an artist of the very first.

This is found in composition as well as in interpretative art: r example, witness the example of the modern French composers who imitated the externals of Cesar Franck without his genius. The result of this imitation in every field is that the faults of the master are copied by those who lack some essential elements which made the other supreme.

In music, more than in any other art to imitate the faults of the reat-their mannerisms if they are on be stage and their outward forms in composition.
