DREAMLAND ADVENTURES

The Giant's Lost Princess

By DADDY

Jack and Janet, with Balky Sam, Jointed Mule and Wooden Elephant, join a circus sideshow. They find the fat woman sorrowing because she has become so fat the handsome giant cannot see how charming she is.

CHAPTER V
The Fat Lady Rolls

THE circus fat lady sat on the Wooden Elephant and looked down from the high hills upon a valley through which ran a broad river. The fat lady was hot, melting and sore from her ride up the hills on the back of Wooden Elephant. And she had lost much fat, which should have made her glad, for that is why she had gone elephant-riding.

But right now the fat lady was too uncomfortable to be glad.

"Oh, how shall I ever get back down these hills?" she gasped. "I'm so bumped and joggled I cannot ride this elephant any more."

Jack and Janet gazed down the long sandy slope which led to the river far below.

"Here is a good place for you to get rid of more fat by running, rolling and swimming," said Janet. But the fat lady only groaned. She felt that she couldn't run or roll.

"You will have to go down the hill and send a truck up here for me," she sighed.

The handsome young giant was looking off over the valley. "Somewhere in this valley I may find the lost princess of my dreams," he sighed. "I know she is charming, and I am sure she is a heroine. I wish I could find her."

The fat lady suddenly gave a scream. "Look at that toddling baby on the river bank," she cried. "Look, he is falling in! He will be drowned!"

Jack, Janet and the giant looked where she pointed, and sure enough, far below they saw a baby tumbling into the broad, deep river. And no one was near to save him.

The fat lady was the first to act. She forgot in an instant her own distress and fears. She thought only of saving the baby. She gave Wooden Elephant a whack.

"Run! Run! Save that baby," she cried.

The whack so startled Wooden Elephant that he plunged down the steep sand bank toward the river.

For a short distance he plowed along like a runaway railroad engine. Then his legs sank deep into the soft sand, and he became stuck.

No sooner had he stopped plunging and sliding than the fat lady slipped from his back, landing in the sand. She picked herself up and began running. But the fat lady had not run in years. She lost her breath in less than a minute.

When the fat lady saw she couldn't run, she did a queer but a most sensible thing—she fell over and began to roll down the hill. And as she was very round, she rolled fast—much faster than she had run.

She rolled, rolled, rolled until she came to the bank of the river, and she rolled right on into the stream, kersplash!

The baby was just going under for the third time. The fat lady reached out and grabbed him. She struggled to the shore and threw the baby upon the bank, where he lay safe and sound.

But when the fat lady tried to climb the bank she couldn't do it. She was too weak and exhausted. She fell back into the water and floated down stream.

Jack, Janet and the giant had gazed on this, too much startled to move. Now the giant gave a shout.

"The fat lady has saved the baby," he cried. "She is a heroine. We must not let her drown."

And the giant started down the hill to save her, his long legs taking huge strides.

Bed Covering

Comfortables of wool or cotton batting covered first with cheesecloth and then with an outer covering of pretty light-weight material are generally needed in the severe weather. Old-fashioned pieced quilts are often interesting, but not very warm, considering their weight. Striped dimity bedspreads with pillow shams to match are deservedly popular, because they are dainty, easy to launder, durable and inexpensive. Having two spreads permits a bed to be kept always fresh.

Afternoon Gown Uses New Sapphire Blue

By CORINNE LOWE

For many a weary day we have had the same fixity of sentiment about our appearance as a row of Halloween cats. We have just had to be black or give up. Today, however, our obligation has ceased. From Paris comes the constant report that Black Beauty, heroine of past years, has gone out and that she has been succeeded by a princess of unrestricted color selection.

In evening gowns a reaction appears more violently in favor of gorgeous brocades and of fabrics in Venetian red, dazzling green and sapphire blue. The last tint has been articulated strongly in Fifth avenue windows of late, and certainly nothing can be more stunning than the velvet evening gown of this shade. Nor is it restricted to evening wear. Some of the most effective afternoon dresses of black have their touch of combination of sapphire.

Thus the accompanying model of black velvet is combined with sapphire chiffon. Bands of fur form the sole trimming.
