

WOOLERS OF CO-EDS AT PENN. SHOULD HAVE $3,000 A YEAR

This Seems Minimum Before They'll Say "Yes"—But for Some, "Mr. Right" Doesn't Even Need a Job

It's hard luck for the young fellows who are courting the co-eds at Penn. At least if ever they want to marry them.

For a long time the young fellows have been waiting for the co-eds to say "Yes" to their proposals. But for some, "Mr. Right" doesn't even need a job.

At Simmons College, in the Boston area, somebody with a greater taste for figures than romance, asked a lot of the young fellows how much they thought a man should have to marry a college girl.

At Smith they found a few trusting damsels who were willing to take a chance on a man and $1000. Some thought that a man ought to have at least $5000 to maintain the style to which they hoped their children might grow accustomed.

Two thousand dollars distributed over winter's coal bills and summer's board at a seaside hotel, would be good, however, to the young things who make class interesting at the University of Pennsylvania.

An adventurous and unmarried investigator made the rounds of the campus and found that $3000 was generally considered about the proper figure. Incidentally, the investigator could not be broken when he called on some of the young women at the "Ten Horse-shoes," which is the disreputable and degraded nickname for the Phi Kappa Sorority.

It's called the "Ten Horseshoes" because that's what it looks like when you write it in Greek. The caller, not knowing the tradition which says that no mere male foot may profane the doormat of the "Ten Horseshoes," barged right in and stood in the hall.

The pretty young woman who came down to answer his questions was too courteous to throw him out.

Earn First—Then Propose. She had ideas of her own, however, about getting married. Miss Tova Tokones is a Danish girl. She thinks that a man who would marry her should come down to answer his questions with a salary envelope which shows he has an income of $5000 a year.

"Of course, they might get along on less," said Tova. "If he could be sure that there would never be sickness, never loss of work. I suppose it would be possible even to live on $2000, but it would mean sacrifices. I know that in the country a house may be bought for as little as $4000, which could be made to do when a young couple started their wedded life. But I think $5000 would be better. I made more than $2000 a year myself before I came to college, and I expect to make more when I get through."

Women who give Auction Bridge Parties should remember one thing that always "makes good" as a prize—

ED. PINAUD'S LILAC. A half-dozen cartons may be obtained at any drug or department store, and insures the recipient six months of lasting old-fashioned garden fragrance.

Decorate With Light. AN INVERTED bowl forms the theme of this interesting fixture of wrought iron. It portrays exquisitely decorative illumination, moderately priced.

Not how many but how good

Pierce-Arrow

The controlling spirit of Pierce-Arrow manufacture is the quality car and not quantity production.

THE same engineering genius that devised and perfected each improvement that for twenty years kept Pierce-Arrow up to its standard, devised and perfected the Dual-Valve engine, which three years ago gave the Pierce-Arrow the most notable impetus of its entire career.
