

ELEVEN FISHERMEN DIE IN ANGLESEA STORM. They had gone out in two boats on the last job of the season. It was the plan to gather in the nets and then raise the seventy-foot poles. The nets had been hauled in when the storm broke. In the first sketch at the left is one of the two boats from which the men were torn by the raging sea. The second photograph shows debris of the second boat that was washed upon the beach at Anglesea. Both boats were tied together as the men worked. At the right Israel Borderson is knocking a hole in the bottom of the boat to let the water out.

SEEN AT MANY OUTDOOR EVENTS. Mrs. S. J. Holloway (left) and Mrs. William L. Hirst. They both are devoted to horse racing.

EN ROUTE TO KANSAS CITY. Marcha Foch smoked a pipe as he viewed the P. E. B. Horseshoe Curve, near Altoona.

WILLIAM E. CROW, JR., son of United States Senator Crow, captain of the P. M. C. football team, with "The Sergeant," a mascot recently brought from Maine.

STARTING FOR HOCKEY FIELD. Miss Helen Locke, captain of Radcliffe College hockey team, uses a "bike" to and from games. Her team is to battle against the English invaders this week.

FIGHTING FOR THE BALL. Two of the players of the Temple University girls' hockey team during a practice game at the Kingessing Recreation Center.

HE'S GLAD THEY DIDN'T STRIKE. Daniel Decimus, a Philadelphia and Reading Passenger fireman, is pleased that it's all over. He runs between Camden and Atlantic City.

JOSEPH C. WAGNER, Assistant Director of Works, talks on zoning on Editorial Page.

SAMUEL S. LEWIS, Pennsylvania's Auditor General, was met by our photographer.

MISS BILLY HOLDEN, Barnard College, masquerading.

TWO FAST PLAYERS. At the left is Tally, halfback, and at the right, Matty Kane, end. Both are dependable members of the St. Joseph's College football eleven. The team was defeated by Brooklyn Prep School yesterday.

OUR CITY'S WORKERS AND WHAT THEY DO.

ABE PASTON, 5507 Lansdowne avenue, soldering lids on bread boxes in the factory of C. B. Porter Company, tinware manufacturers, 128 North Second street.

CLIMBING OVER MANY OBSTACLES. Pedestrians on their way to and from the Pennsylvania and Reading ferries have been having a lot of annoyance in crossing Delaware avenue in its torn-up condition, due to repaving and repairs. The clipping shows how they climb over planks, parts of trees and stones at the foot of Chestnut street.

BUSY PHILADELPHIANS

CHECKING UP AT END OF DAY. Edward Moffett, third teller of the Republic Trust Company, 129 Chestnut street. He is married, has one child and lives in Yeadon, Pa.