VERY many of us attended Mrs.

Cornelius Stevenson's funeral today, to pay a last tribute of respect to a woman who has been a leader among women for many, many years, through the sevent of the sweetness of character and her for her sweetness of character and her kindly spirit. Her marvelous work for France during the late war won for France during the late war won for her high honors from the French Government. And, indeed, if I started conferred upon her and which her intellect and broad knowledge had deserved. I would not know when to stop.

She was a most lovable woman, strong in her likes and her death after an illness which entailed great suffering has saddened us all more than can be said. Mr. George Wharton Pepper said a beautiful tribute to her at the dinner for Marshal Fôch at the Bellevie-Stratford on Tuesday night, and everywhere one hears her spoken of with regret.

And every one feels so sorry for Mr. Stevenson. He was run over by an gutemobile last July, you know, and has been in the Jefferson Hospital ever since, his hip having been broken.
