DAUGHTER OF THE SUN

THIS BEGINS THE STORY

Jim Kendric, a devil-may-care, whole-hearted American, in a Mexican gambling joint meets Rulz Rios, an old rival and enemy, with his companion, a handsome woman in man's attire, who wins a game at high stakes from him. Kendric has made a pact with his old chum. Barlow, to go a voyage for some mysterious, Mexican treasure. At the picturesque scene of their exploit in the Mexican mountains, again in male attire, to their amazement appears Zoraida. It appears the treasure-hunting party is in the power of the strange woman and her coterie. In a startling interview she discloses that she is the last of the Aztro princesses, and lars claim to the treasure of the Montezumas, which Kendric is seeking. She proffers him her love and is hitter when he says he has no time for love. Meanwhile he has sight of an American girl. Betty Gordon, who is being held for ransom, 'Kendric's friend West, has a ranch nearby. Zoraida permits him to vist West, on condition he raturns to her headquarters. West proffers heip. Zoraida shows her power by having Barlow, who has come under her spoil, badly shot and burning down West's ranch. Kendric, keeping his word, returns to Zoraida's place, but she is away, and he decides to make a setaway. He finds Betty Gordon and promises to aid her, and is offered assistance by Rios for a big price. Rios is after Zoraida and her treasure, and wishes to get a rival out of the way, whom she has successfully 'warmed,' He tells Kendric kan dentire the list went and toorious dancer.

At first he did not understand. Then he stared at her speechlessly. Words of Juanita, spoken fearfully that morning, recurred to him: "She would give me to her cat, her terrible, terrible cat, to play with!" Even to Zoraida's lawlessness there must be a limit; even the cold cruelty looking out of her obligate. cold cruelty looking out of her oblique eyes now could not carry her so far.
