

AYESHA ISN'T BEAUTIFUL, BUT IS MODEL CHAMBERMAID

She Wouldn't Do in Chestnut Hill, but Is Favorite at the Zoo, Where Winter Is Welcomed

In these days when the servant problem is high, any one in need of a first-class chambermaid should apply at the Zoo. For there is a recent arrival there, a superior orange-outang of fair complexion and reddish hair, a wild woman from Borneo.

Every evening she makes her own bed by gathering hay and piling it in comfortable layers. She punches neat, comfortable pillows for the night. In the morning she arises, shakes up her bed in the approved manner of chambermaids and awaits the morning visitors.

In applying, ask for "Ayesha." The name, you remember, was that of Mohammed's favorite wife—his second one, named "very beautiful." Ayesha and it means that she can live up to the name, for when Emerson Brown, head of the Zoological Gardens, draws near the cage and opens the door, she looks out of her deep brown eyes and roars her arms around his neck. And the only way that she can be induced to leave her embraces is by throwing to the back of the cage a banana or like delicacy.

For the animals at the Zoo are tremendously fond of delicacies, though they seem to be in almost as stiff training as football players at the height of the season. Two fat little black bears, lately sent to the Zoo, were used to a daily share of candy.

But when their former foster-parents, Mr. and Mrs. Richard Reardon, of Tyngsboro, called the other day with a weekly supply, the young cubs were allowed only one lolly-pop piece and one large red apple. The bears were so disappointed that they chewed the lolly-pop sticks into splinters.

It's funny to watch the reaction of the various animals to the first snowfall. The gardens are brilliant in white light, and the polar bear grins appreciatively. The great buffalo pawed a hole in the ground and stood over her week-old calf while the snow flew in gusts.

The deer, more provident, led their young into the protection of the animal house, and a chimpanzee climbed to the top of her cage and shook the bars till the snow fell in clumps from the roof.

After-Dinner Tricks

No. 26—Pencil Writes All Colors

When the performer states that he can make a borrowed pencil write any color the lender chooses, his statement will not be taken seriously. He merely smiles, however, and asks that a color be chosen. Suppose red is the desired color. The performer calmly writes the word "red" on a slip of paper, and thus proves his statement to be correct.

TO SUE CHANDLERS

Member of Phila. Orchestra to File Claim for $1300

Persons in all walks of life have been hit by the failure of Chandler Brothers & Co., the latest customer of the defunct firm prepared to bring suit against them being Anton Torello, first contractor of the Philadelphia Orchestra. Mr. Torello's claim is for $1300. He declares the firm allowed him to enter into dealings with them last May, when they knew their condition was shaky.

There will be another hearing before Referee Hill, in the South Penn

Square Building, tomorrow morning. At this time Earl Hendershall, head of the firm, is expected to again take the stand and submit to cross-examination concerning the firm's dealings and records. The interrogation will be conducted by J. Howard Reber, counsel for Willard U. Barrows, the trustee.

Two Autos Wrecked

Two automobiles were wrecked in a collision at Township Line and Old York road, north of Ogontz, yesterday. The drivers escaping with only minor hurts. The cars are owned by Harvey Knox, of Fox Chase, and Joseph McCann, of Germantown.
