

VOTERS' LEAGUE
CASH NEARLY GONE

But Organization Will Continue
Fight for Good Government, Officials Say

The Voters' League treasury is virtually empty, but its officials say the league will continue the fight for good government, and that reorganization plans are being considered.

Edward J. Hunter, executive secretary, resigned that office Saturday and has returned to newspaper work. He would make no comment today on the league's financial condition.

Frank M. Ritter, newly elected chairman of the league, today minimized reports of financial difficulties. He declared the league is growing stronger every day, and that its backers have no thought of giving up the civic campaign it inaugurated last June.

The first clash in the political arena the new independent organization had was at the September primary. All its candidates for Republican nominations were defeated by Combine men. Tens of thousands of "stay-at-homes" by their indifference, helped the Combine to victory.

The Voters' League was organized June 23 last, when officers and a board of managers were chosen and a constitution was approved. Arthur H. Lea was one of the leaders in the movement. He recently resigned the chairmanship.

Invitations sent to citizens at the time of its organization stated the league was designed to "guard and promote the interests of the citizens of Philadelphia in the improvement and enforcement of laws, in the administration of the city and county governments and in the nomination and election of candidates for public office."

Headquarters were opened July 25 at 224 South Broad street. League officials are now considering whether to give up the headquarters. It is believed the principal members will meet and decide on a future course of action.

Franklin Spencer Edmunds, who took a prominent part in the organization of the league, when asked whether it would dissolve for lack of funds, said: "It looks very much the other way. We have just elected a new president. My feeling is strongly the other way."

Thomas Itaburn White was even more sure that there is a bright future ahead of the league. "Certainly we are going to continue," he said, emphatically.

"Are your funds not very low?" he was asked.

"Funds for public movements are always low," he replied. "But we are

PAYEYE

The first three white men who bore into the interior of New Guinea were warned against Payeye when he joined their party. He had not yet killed his man. He was hungry for human flesh. Then—the white man who had trusted him most disappeared and Payeye's laughter is heard in the jungle. Merlin Moore Taylor, leader of the expedition, tells this story of fascinating adventure among He's on the way!

Genial old Santa has hitched up his trusty reindeers, filled that wonderful sleigh of his, and is flying here as fast as the wind. He has a good distance to come, but already you can hear the tinkle of his sleigh bells in the happy smile on everyone's face.

Little hearts are beating faster, little ears are listening expectantly, little minds are dwelling reverently on the greatness and goodness of the mysterious Santa Claus.

Christmas season—what a wonder season! Worldly animosities consumed by the spiritual fire of love—the joy of making others happy. This is the world as it should be—three hundred and sixty-five days in the year.
