Even in outting the wind has effect upon the play, and I think that few players realize to what extent this is so. If a player is skeptical about this. I want to advise him to go out to the parting green on the next windy day and make several experiments. Let him place balls ten feet away from the hole in four directions and hit each one with the same amount of effort, or as nearly the same as possible. He will be surthe same as possible. He will be sur-prised to find that the bulls traveling with the wind carry two or three feet further than those against the wind. Perhaps in the first case he will hole out or be too strong, and against the wind he will be short.
