Wolves in the Woods By DADDY

Distant howls in the woods tell that wolves are proviling. Jack and Jonet, however, forget the howls of the wolves when the rabbits ask them come out and play in the moon-

CHAPTER II

The Coasting Party T THE call of the rabbits, Jack and A Janet hurried into their coats and caps and mittens and overshoes. They ran out into the moonlight, where the rabbits greeted them with a song:

The snow, the snow has a crust of ice, Hurrah, hurrah for siding!
The night is cold but the air is nice,
Hurrah, hurrah for siding!
We will so a mile while you count twice,
Hurrah, hurrah for siding!

Jack and Janet found the song was true. The snow was covered with a when a sudden mid-winter rain had been followed quickly by a cold snap. The ley surface of the snow was strong

The ley surface of the show was strong enough to hold them up.
"Come on, we are going coasting," cried Hor.pity-Hop Rabbit and Hippity-Hop Rabbit. They had two sleds, and it took only one glance for Jack and Janet to see that the sleds were coasters. It was a bit were and Janet to see that the sleds were their own coasters. It was a bit saucy of the rabbits to ask them to go coasting on their own sleds, but Jack and Janet didn't stop to think of that. They were too busy thinking what fun it would be coasting with the rabbits down the long, tree-covered hills that led from far back in the forest to the shores of the lake.

"Hurrah, hurrah for sliding." the children cried, joining in the song of the rabbits.
"Woof! Woof! Woof!" barked Johnny Bull from Jack's house. "Let me go with you."

"No, no! Dogs will spoil our fun!"
eried all the rabbits. Jack and Janet didn't want to spoil the rabbits' fun, and besides. Toddie Pupkins and John-ny Bull were watchdogs and they ought ny Bull were watchdogs and they ought to stay home to attend to business. "You can't go," cried Jack. "Yow! Yow! The wolves will get you," yelped Toddie Pupkins, "You will need us to protect you. Woof! Woof!" barked Johnny Bull, Jack and Janet had forgotten about Jack and Janet had forgotten about the wolves, whose distant howling had made them shiver before they went to bed. They listened carefully—they could hear nothing. The woods, with the moonlight glistening on the snow-clad pines, looked like a forest of Christmas trees. What danger could be "Come on! Come on!" cried the rabbits, and away they hopped up the bill.

After them went Jack and Janet.

When they got to the top of the bill.

a full mile back from the lake, they fastened the two sleds together. Jack lay on the first one to steer, and Janet and the rabbits piled on both sleds be-One, two, three, and away they went,

My, it was an exciting ride, over the smooth crust! Whizz! they fairly flew. Down the road, through the woods, swerving around trees, across clearings, rushety, whoopety, clitter-clatter, away to the shore of the lake. At the bottom a great drift loomed ahead. Jack tried to steer away from it, and quick as seat over went the sleds. Rabbits and chil-dren were piled in a laughing heap. It had been a smashing coast and this was a jolly ending. Back up the hill they went, and again they got ready to start.

Then they heard a howl-a longdrawn-out, dismal bowl-the howl of the hungry wolves.

(Tomorrow will be told how Jack and Janet meet strangers that friendly.)

Adventures With a Purse

TUST in case some of you did not read about them before, and because they e, to my mind, so well worth knoware, to my mind, so well worth knowing about I want once more to tell you about the special bair nets. if you are one who can wear and wear and wear a hair net why that's a dif-ferent thing again. But if you are hard on them, let me tell you about the double mesh nets. Although in actual appearance they are infinitely beavier than the ones we are accustomed to, get when over the hair they are, no more noticeable than the regthey last about three or four times longer than any others I have ever tried. They can be had. I believe, in all shades and cost fifteen cents each.

This adventure is addressed to the woman who loves ear rings. And it tells of a particularly nice assortment of black ear rings at reasonable prices. You can get large round rings and then than a ten-cent piece. And you can get eval-shaped rings in several sizes. The price of the smaller ones are seventy-five cents. The larger rings are $1.50.
