ONE DIES, ONE DYING AFTER STREET DUEL

Sudden Blaze of Shots Spreads Terror at Isaminger and Mifflin Streets

BLACK HAND PLOT SEEN

One man is dead and another, an innocent bystander, is dying as a result of a volley of pistol shots that started in the vicinity of Isaminger and Mifflin streets, last night.

The whole case is shrouded in mystery, and the murder squad detectives are under the impression that for an instant the sinister secret workings of the "Black Hand" broke into the open and left its trail of death and agony.

The dead man is Michael Sansalone, twenty-six, 322 B street N. W., Washington, D. C., Pasquale Libre, twenty-four, 1925 South Isaminger street, living in St. Agnes' Hospital. The police are hunting for John Casotto, twenty-five, said to live at 1821 Hoffman street. The family at that address does not know him.

Sansalone was shot through the ear, cheek, chest, mouth, hip and abdomen, six bullets in all being lodged in his body. He was taken to St. Agnes' Hospital at midnight and died at 1:30 this morning. The most desperate efforts of the police were fruitless in getting a connected statement from Libre. Libre is in the same hospital with two bullets in his abdomen and physicians do not hold much hope for his recovery.

Assault Escaped
 The tragedy occurred without warning at 11:30 and although the murder squad has found four of the witnesses, none of them can tell how the affair started. All agree that a battle of revolver shots attracted every one's attention to two men standing in the middle of the street. Both firing, Libre Sansalone fell. The assailant stood over his prostrate form and continued firing until his weapon was emptied. Calmly reloading it he turned and ran and has not been seen since.

Dying Statement Made
 District Detective Transdell, of the Fourth and Snyder avenue station, hurried to St. Agnes' Hospital and tried to get a statement from Sansalone. He was in such a weakened condition and such pain that his statement was disconnected and not much could be made of his story. A magistrate was hastily summoned to take the dying man's deposition, but there was only enough in it to incriminate Casotto.

Sansalone Wounded Libre
 Sansalone did, however, admit it was he who fired the shots that wounded Libre. A revolver with two empty chambers found beside him in the street together with the fact that he was being toward Libre when the latter fell, make the police believe this part of the story.

Scores of people witnessed the last part of the tragedy. Isaminger street is a small thoroughfare running north and south west of Third street. The neighborhood is populated almost entirely by Italians, and all the figures in the shooting are of that nationality. They are notoriously close-mouthed in such matters, and the detectives are under the impression that many know more than they care to tell.

Find Trail of Blood
 Detectives found a trail of blood leading from the middle of the street to Michael Keane's room near Canal. The police believe that the slayer must have been hurt and they think that his blood was what started the chase.

One theory that is not being worked out is that Sansalone came on from Washington for the express purpose of killing someone in a vendetta, and that the other man got into the act.

Besides Henry and Scheller, of the murder squad at City Hall, and Transdella, several Italian detectives are on the case. With only Sansalone's flimsy story and the bloody trail to go on, all these men believe the solution lies somewhere in the number minds of vendetta enemies and that the whole truth will not be found out for a long time. All their efforts are now bent toward apprehending Casotto.

The police have so far been able to locate the home of Sansalone. Libre came to this country six months ago and has been living with his uncle, at the Isaminger street address. He works at the Mexican cigar factory, at the Tenth street wharf.
