

PENROSE, FREED, "FEELS BETTER"

Glad Awful Charge of Killing Brother Was Lifted by Jury

JUST VERDICT, SAYS FATHER

"The verdict of the jury freeing my son Norman of the charge of killing his brother, Ralph, was exactly what I expected," said Samuel Penrose, father of Norman Penrose. "I never for a moment felt that any other verdict could have been reached by twelve fair-minded persons. Surely no one could believe that Norman wilfully slew the brother that he loved so well. My boys were great chums all of their lives, and no one feels more keenly the tragedy than does Norman.

"However, I know he is glad that the jury has exonerated him of the charge of wilfully killing Ralph, and, of course, that will, I hope, help to revive his downcast spirits. He will stay at home with me. He has not made any definite plans for the future, but before long I expect that he will get down to hard work."

Norman Penrose today is a much brighter young man. He has maintained at all times that the shooting was purely accidental, and now that a jury, convinced that his story was a true one, lifted that charge he has lost that morbid feeling and wants to get into some kind of business at once.

"Of course, I am thankful to those who helped me in my hour of peril," he said today. "I was quite confident that the jury believed my story and would send me home with that awful charge lifted from my shoulders. When they did so I was glad—glad for my sake and for those who have been so kind to me and believed in me. Just now I haven't much to say about the case except that I feel better."

The jury took two ballots before they acquitted Penrose. The first vote was eleven to one for acquittal. In explaining this one vote for conviction one of the jurors said that he voted that way because he was not satisfied that Penrose had told the entire circumstances surrounding the shooting of his brother.

Gas Leak; Match; Injuries Slight

John Mucera was knocked unconscious by an explosion in the cellar of his home when he struck a match near a leaky gas pipe. He was only slightly hurt and recovering rapidly and sent in a fire alarm. The house was slightly damaged.

George Washington's Couch of State

BEFORE he was a soldier and a statesman, George Washington was an engineer and surveyor. He was one of the early pioneers who realized that good roads and convenient transportation were necessities of civilization.

The automobile industry has been largely responsible for the beautiful highways of today.

Better motor cars are being built to give the public the most convenient transportation.
