OTHER SIDE-OH-H

Netwithstanding the age-long portrayal of the landlord as a heart'ess monster and a villain of the first water, he is not always so black as painted. In fact, landlords vary not only in degree but in kind; there are the good ss well as the bad, and a large sprinkling of indifferent ones. Such is the deduction of the Philadelphia Housing Association after receiving from its agents reports based on personal interviews with tenants in many sections of the city. Says one woman, ill for weeks and unable to earn sufficient money to make ends meet, "my landlord is the grandest man." this because he nad told her never to worry about such a thing as the rent, and to pay when she could. although she was already in arrears.

Fear of landlords is present in many homes, not so much of being forced into the street as of paying an exorbitant rent. Many persons refused all information to the Honsing Association, stating that were the house owner to find out that they had complained he would raise their rent. But, as has been sold, the bark of the villainous landlord is often worse than his bite. Witness the case of the woman with three children on Redfield street. Her landlord demands each month $40. Sie pays him the usual $25, and no more said until the next installment is due. It's always for $40, but the land-lord is each time just $15 minus, according to his own calculations.

HAS CROSSED RIVER

Ben Gandy, Dean of Pilots on Delaware, Recalls the Olden Days

"SAFETY FIRST" HIS MOTTO

Life on the ocean wave has changed greatly since Captain Ben Gandy, pilot of the Delaware River ferries of the Pennsylvania Railroad, began the first of his half million odd trips across the historic stream.

That was back in '88, the year of the greatest blizzard that ever troubled the waters of the De'aware. The latter, by the way, were so immoderately dis-turbed on this occasion, that they retired southward en masse, leaving the ferry slips high and dry. Captain Gandy wes born in Cape May County in 1865. Thirteen years later he went to sea, and ever since has followed the water. In 1888 he became a pilot on the Camden-Philadel-phia run, and has continued in that "The trip across the river was different i nthose days," he said. "Out in the middle of the river were two islands extending end to end from South street opposite Market street. Had to Use Two Channels
