

P. T. PARK RULING IS OFF UNTIL JULY

Judge Won't Give Decision in Injunction Proceedings for Four Months

WORK NOT TO BE STARTED

After legal argument on the amusement park project planned near Sixty-third and Market streets by a subsidiary of the Rapid Transit Company, Judge Johnson, at Media, today said he cannot hand down a decision until July.

Residents of Millbourne and Stonehouse are asked for an injunction restraining the Willow Grove Park Amusement Company from constructing a park on the West Chester Pike in Upper Darby Township, west of Sixty-third and Market streets.

The judge's announcement, explaining that he will be too busy to decide the case for four months, was regarded as ending the possibility of the park's construction this year. Moreover, attorneys indicated that whatever the decision, an appeal would be carried to the State Supreme Court.

About sixty residents of Millbourne and Stonehouse, were in Court to hear the arguments of Thomas Raeburn White for those seeking the injunction, and of James Jay Gordon, counsel for the amusement park company.

Mr. White argued that the proposed location is a residential area and that homes were built without any thought of an attempt to build an amusement park there. He said the amusement devices would annoy residents by their noise, and that the crowds flocking to the park would take away the quietness of the neighborhood.

Former Judge Gordon declared Millbourne and Stonehouse are not exclusively residential sections. He said there are an ice plant, a flour mill and a golf links there. The remaining residents, he said, are merely "apprehending a fear that a nuisance will be created and are imagining things which are not true."

The P. T. subsidiary has acquired the thirty-nine acre tract planned as the park site.

Fair Body Gets Promise of U. S. Aid

In the last time, upon his return from Florida, he announced that Sequi-Centennial committee would be re-organized or shaken up today it appeared to be the consensus of opinion that the Mayor was being "reorganized."

Perhaps the most signal demonstration of the assertion of the Legislative Committee came when Mr. Johnson, as a spokesman for the committee, in the course of an interview warmly praised the offer of Edward W. Bok to pay Herbert Hoover, Secretary of Commerce, a salary of $50,000 for five years, to serve as director general of the fair.

Mr. Johnson went further and indicated that the selection of Mr. Hoover, a member of the President's Cabinet, would at once give confidence in the fair.

Mr. Johnson made his statement about Mr. Hoover and the Bok offer, when it was brought out that neither Hoover nor the director general question was mentioned in the conference with the President, despite the fact that recently the Mayor intimated that the question would be put up to the President at the conference.

Of course the significance of Mr. Johnson's statement and his independence of the Mayor is that the Mayor has plainly indicated that he is as all concerned of the Bok offer or of Mr. Hoover at $50,000 a year.

The presidential conference had many other points of interest, not the least of which was the declaration of James Beck, Solicitor General of the United States, that the Sequi-Centennial would be celebrated during the second term of President Harding and that the celebration would be a fitting and climactic feature of the second term and climax to the Conference on Limitation of Armament.

The President's second term, said Mr. Beck, could be the most successful and fruitful gathering of the nations. Probably this was the first time that the question of a second term had been placed before the President in such a formal manner. There was no such a thing that the President did not appreciate the idea or that he was displeased.

"Fairmont Park Selected?"

Then, again, Mr. Beck virtually told the President that the Fairmont Park

Fair Body Without Diner on Train Goes Hungry

Mayor Moore and members of the Executive Committee of the Sequi-Centennial got a train for Philadelphia last night which did not carry a diner. The committee members, who are engaged on a project which will involve about $50,000,000, could get nothing to eat. It was nearly 8 o'clock when the Mayor dug up some chocolate.

"This is a sweet situation," remarked John H. Mason, president of the Commercial Trust Company. "At least I got the chocolate, tout de suite," replied the Mayor. John F. Lewis explained that tout de suite means "meanly quickly."

When Baltimore was reached sandwiches were provided, which led to more jocose remarks. "This is not a ham party," said one of the committee men.

Fair Conference PLEASING TO MAYOR

Moore Issues Statement on Trip to See President on Sequi-Centennial

DETAILS NOT YET FIXED

The assurance of President Harding yesterday that he looked with favor upon the Sequi-Centennial Exposition and that he would transmit a favorable word to Congress, was commented upon by Mayor Moore today as the big achievement for which the Executive Committee had been working for some time. The Mayor said that the committee is preparing to report to the Board of Directors upon a site and upon other important questions at an early date.

"So large an undertaking naturally arouses comment," said the Mayor, "and there will be more or less criticism of plans for the time being, especially until the site is picked. Then we may expect the knockers' to subside and the boosters to get in their heavy work."

What Harding was told

"The committee put up its proposition to the President yesterday in about this sequence:

"The Sequi-Centennial and the dream of broad-minded Philadelphia with respect to it was explained to the President with a view of having him visualize its national and international significance. The President seemed to know a great deal about the movement and did not hesitate to say that the purpose underlying it was wholly commendable.

"The President was asked to encourage the movement by special reference to it at his convenience, in a message to Congress. He said he would do so, and suggested that I send him printed data, including a statement from the Governor as to the attitude of the State. The President was told that a bill would be introduced fixing the purpose, time and place for the exposition, in order to justify correspondence and negotiations with foreign nations through the Department of State.

"While no definite agreement was reached, it was clearly understood that what would be first asked for was a talking quiz with Congress and the President of Philadelphia as the proper place for this great world celebration and 1926, for the 150th anniversary of the signing of the Declaration of Independence, the fitting time. There was some discussion as to how far the Federal Government might participate in the erection of buildings or the placing of a Federal exhibit, but this hangs largely upon what had been done in connection with other large affairs.

No Decisions Reached

"No attempt was made to reach a definite understanding, since Congress must necessarily be appealed to in this matter. And the fabrics are of the present trend toward congressional economy, and Senator Pepper said Congress would have to be given strong and appealing reasons for any direct appropriation.

"The committee did not discuss the matter of director general or any of the other internal affairs of the Sequi-Centennial exhibit with the President. These were left for later consideration.

"The Executive Committee will probably meet informally for several days beginning today, to consider the question of site and the program of performance recently referred to by A. B. Johnson."

SECRETARIES BORN, NOT MADE, SAYS DEFENDER OF CLASS

Many Bask in Limelight Turned Their Way by Labors of Subordinates, A. L. Church Asseverates

Are you a secretary? Perhaps you are without ever having known it. Or perhaps—like some girl stenographers—you are, spiritually, something widely different; a faithful helper or an over-zealous or a writer of polyphonic prose.

Anyway, this much is certain; either you are or you aren't, like being Irish or fond of lobster. For Arthur L. Church, of this city, has made a little research crystallized secretaries into hard and fast temperamental category. A born secretary himself, secretary of a baseball club at the age of ten, secretary of his college class a few years later and now secretary of the Baldwin Locomotive Works, he stands out as the protagonist of secretaries all over the world.

What is a Secretary

"A secretary," says Mr. Church, "is one with an instinct for taking burdens that properly belong to others. He is a son of Martha, who does the work while the sons of Mary stand around and wait in dramatic attitudes trying to impress the popular imagination. He is the loyal George to whom the troubles of the rest of the world are persistently relegated.

"Rarely indeed does the secretary hear the credit that is due to him. We hear the name of Aaron mentioned as frequently as the name of Moses, yet I suspect that Aaron had a clearer idea of his purpose and as much to do with its accomplishment as Moses himself. Again, every one has heard of Charlemagne, but relatively few of his paladins, the good Turpin, the Archbishop, the ideal secretary if ever was.

"Greatness is a relative thing, and perhaps there are kinds of greatness to which the secretarial instinct is unnecessary or inadvisable. Anyway, Lincoln, Danton, John Brown, Richard the Lionheart and Al Jolson were not in any sense secretaries. On the other hand, Alexander Hamilton, John Hay and Machiavelli were secretaries of the finest order.

Shakespeare Too Careless

"If you press me I must say that Shakespeare was no secretary. What secretary would be so careless of loose ends as to have a man whose father's ghost appeared to him in the first part of a play, speak later on in the same play of—

"That undiscovered country from whose bourne—

No traveler returns—

"But men—men over five feet eleven—cannot hope to become secretaries; neither can decidedly blond men. The secretarial type is of middle height and dark complexion rather than fair. Babe Ruth would not do very well, nor G. K. Chesterton.

"The worst secretary—and the most unsecretarial person I ever knew—was a large blond man I got into to be a secretary, in which case you will sooner or later or you have not, in which case you will not matter how many business schools you go to or how many office contrivances you learn to manipulate."

On Trial for Killing Woman

George Ware, a Negro, 629 North Camac street, was placed on trial today before Judge Shoemaker for the killing of Mary A. Schwenck, also colored, of 1340 Erie street. Ware told the police they quarreled over fifty cents. The woman attacked him with a bottle, he said, and she slashed her throat.

THOMAS CLAY SCHOOL DAMAGED BY FLAMES

Fire Does $10,000 Damage to Basement and First Floor

Fire last night destroyed the basement and first floor of the Thomas Clay Public School, 1318-24 South Howard street. The blaze started in the basement through a defective flue and spread through the first story.

A large number of books and desks were destroyed. Police estimated the damage at $10,000. The building was erected sixty-two years ago.

With the prospect of a vacation children who attend the school looked on with glee, but Warburton Eantline, sixty-five years old, of 1315 South Howard street, its janitor for the last forty years, stood bringing his hands as he watched the flames.

PASTOR SEES END OF AGE OF JAZZ

World Turning Spiritual, Says Rev. H. W. A. Hanson at Lenten Service

'FALSE IDEAS' BLOWN AWAY

"The neurotic age of jazz and short skirts is passing away and men and women are beginning to turn to spiritual things," said the Rev. Henry W. A. Hanson, a Lutheran pastor, of Harrisburg, at the noon Lenten service in Keith's Theatre today.

"Jazz dances and other evils are waning and civilization is beginning to face the serious problems of reconstruction. Before the war we had built up a civilization composed largely of material things.

"The war, which was so terribly destructive in many ways, was also a great breeze that swept over the world, blowing away many confused and false ideas so that mankind was better able to realize the true value of spirituality and noble ideals.

"We have seen living at a dizzy pace during the last ten years. It would not be too much to say that the last decade has seen accomplished what heretofore concentration, have had their effects on manners and morals.

"Men and women are coming to realize that it is not safe to build on a material foundation alone. In turning more and more to the things of the spirit we will be able to gather up the noblest of dreams and ideals, we will be able to give expression to our noblest hopes and aspirations."

"We may talk one creed on Sunday, but it's another thing to live it through the week," according to Bishop Philip Cook, St. Francis Xavier was at St. Stephen's Church today.

Bishop Cook said there are two kinds of creeds, the written and the unwritten. "A lot of people believe it is possible to have more than one master and in so doing they give themselves
