Dr. Milton A. Nobles Says Earth Disturbance May Sink Part of World

SEES EQUATOR SHIFT NORTH

March 15 will witness the beginning of an era of extended volcanic disturbances in the Northern Hemisphere, with a possible submergence of the greater part of Europe and Asia Minor, according to Dr. Milton A. Nobles, 1627 Sanson street, who predicted such upheavals in the past with uncanny accuracy.

Dr. Nobles is a graduate of Syracuse University. His life-long study has been in general and volcanic in particular, as the result of which he has evolved a method of predicting volcanic disturbances through the observation of winds and air currents.

"It is very simple," explained Dr. Nobles, in discussing his method. "Where there is an area of incipient volcanic activity, the heat which accumulates beneath the surface of the earth at that point gives rise to a column of warm air, which, ascending, draws toward it winds from all directions like a fire."

"When there is any marked or unusual flow of winds in any direction and it continues for a certain length of time, it becomes apparent that there is something brewing in that section. It is then easy to locate the seat of the disturbance, as most of the volcanic eruptive points are definitely known."

Cataclysm Brewing
"Indications are that there will be great activity, a cataclysm, in fact, throughout a section which may be roughly defined as a circle extending through Greenland, Iceland, Northeastern Canada, all of Western Europe, Greece, Asia Minor, the East Indies and so north and around to the starting point."

"All this district is a vast honey-comb underground. When Vesuvius emits lava there is a corresponding fall in the lava level in the crater of Hecla, the great volcano in Iceland, 2800 miles away. At the same time the water in the crater of Mount Wan, thousands of miles away in Asia, subsides to unusually low levels."

"Another significant thing about this area is that God has been exerting His manifold influences to move away their populations, either by death or actual transference of races to preserve them from the more horrible fate which

Says Earth Disturbances May Sink Part of Europe

The eruption of Mt. Vesuvius last Monday was forecast by Dr. Milton A. Nobles, 1627 Sanson street, in a letter to the New York World, dated March 1.

The volcanic disturbances of Martinique, Stromboli, Chile, Japan, Borneo and Hecla were all indicated to Dr. Nobles in advance through his system of atmospheric observation.

He predicts that March 15 an era of intense volcanic activity in the Northern Hemisphere will commence, which may result in the submergence of a large part of Europe.

awaits those who are involved in these coming disturbances. "This great upheaval will cause great shifts in the world's balance, thus creating a new equator, with marked climatic changes, together with a noticeable expansion of the world's mass. I expect this earth will be appreciably larger in size after the outbreak, just as it has increased in size in all four of the shifts of the axis which have occurred in the past."

Noah Sailed From Virginia
"These alterations of the polar axis have accompanied extreme changes in the terrestrial aspect of the earth. As recently as 886, A. D., there was a passage through the continent of America, separating what is now Canada in the extreme north from the lower portion of South America. Only Mount Mitchell and other peaks were above water."

"The earth's first tilt submerged for the time being the eastern portion of the United States (the equator ran along the Appalachian mountains at that time), a region which was undoubtedly the oldest and most suitable region for human habitation."

"This submergence is the Deluge of Biblical reference, and the submerged region must, in the nature of things, have been the Garden of Eden, the earliest seat of the race. In all probability Noah set sail from Virginia or some spot not far distant from this very place."

"The polar area of this time, when the earth was approximately only one-eighth its present size, fell in Switzerland, where its remains are to be seen today."

"This is proved by the fossilized palms and coconuts found in blasting the Hudson tunnels, and the similar tropic relics of this lost age found in the Antarctic regions by the Shackleton expedition."

"Then the equator shifted, through extreme volcanic activity, and the climate changed. This performance was repeated, with various changes, three times subsequently."

"The district in which we live, rejuvenated by the deposits of the sea after being exhausted by long human occupancy, was in course of time lifted above the waters again and now constitutes one of the richest and most attractive portions of this globe."

GIRL UNNERVES BANDITS

"Dare You to Shoot," She Says. Men Flee, Girl Faints
Orange, N. J., March 12.—(By A. P.)—Amazonian defiance last night called the bluff of two hold-up men. "I dare you to shoot, I don't believe your gun is loaded," Miss Mary Collins, thirty-four, told the two thugs when one pointed a revolver at her head and the other demanded her money. No flash of gunfire followed. The baffled bandits took to their heels as a man appeared in the distance up the street. Miss Collins then fainted.
