

JUST GOSSIP ABOUT PEOPLE

Nancy Wynne Tells of Very Informal Costumes Worn at Palm Beach Luncheons—A Few Sub-Debs Mentioned—She Sees Some Smart and Unusual Hats

WHAT do you think your sensations would be if you invited some people to luncheon and they arrived dressed in bathing suits? But you would not be a bit surprised if you were in Palm Beach, for that seems to be the proper way to attend a luncheon down there. You see you go in and out and sit around and smoke for an hour or more afterward and then down to the beach and into the water.

HAVE you seen the stunning black hat that Uxendale Caneer is wearing? It is trimmed with white plumes and the long end of the plume falls off the side toward the back of the wide brim. I saw her on Tuesday at the last Actors' Afternoon of the Chestnut Clubman Club.

Kathleen Howard, the grand opera singer, was there and we say that which would have been queer of any one else, but just suited her to perfection. It was small, of black velvet trimmed with dull gold brocade and the front pointed a little to resemble a sort of Egyptian headdress. Three long strands were fastened under her chin, and from the right side of the hat fell a long thin loop of brocade and a long loop of pearls. Her gown was of black velvet and she certainly was fascinating in her description of how an opera is put on.

Did you know that Gwendolen McIntire, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Henry B. McIntire, of Ardmore, is not coming out next winter as so many people thought? She still has two more years of school, that is, including this year. She goes to the University and will make her debut into the year after she graduates. There certainly will be another big crowd that winter won't there? Emma Norris, Babo Mather, Elna Stevens, Helen's younger sister and all their friends.

THE stores are full of the small jelly shoes these days. And, as usual, the small girls and boys look with longing eyes at them as they pass the windows, and when they come in to a shop with mother they generally manage to pass the counter of any something which will call their attention to the fact that "jelly eggs" are here again. Yesterday, as I waited for a package, small Eleanor who had come in with mother and the counter attendant where the jelly eggs were and said to the salesperson: "How much is the egg?" (Eleanor is six, so she's not particular about "is" or "are.") "They are a penny each," she replied smiling. "But," said Eleanor, "I don't want a piece. I want a whole egg."

Mrs. Marguerite J. Boyle, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Samuel J. Boyle, of Keswick House, Rydal, will give a shower and tea tomorrow afternoon at her home of her grandmother, Mrs. John E. JUDGE LEWIS IS DINED

Two hundred and fifty members of the Har Sinai Lodge of B'nai B'rith at Banquet. Judge Lewis, who is the principal speaker, said there is a better feeling among the Jewish people today than ever before. He said he does not want to be known as a Jewish judge, but as an American judge of the Jewish religion. Judge Lewis came to this country from Russia and started life as a newsboy. Another of the speakers was Henry Small, who has been a lifelong friend of Judge Lewis. The new judge was presented with a traveling bag. Other speakers were Harry Petrosky, Abraham Warner and Habi Freedman, of Hethel-Eli Synagogue. Joseph W. Salus was toastmaster. The judge started a membership drive at the dinner, appointing committees and pledging each member to get at least five new members.
