This denial was in reply to charges made at a meeting in Baltimore last night, when Miss Hamilton's resignation was discussed.

Miss Thomas said that Miss Hamilton had not been asked or forced to resign and that the only disagreement was over Miss Hamilton's successor.

Miss Thomas said Miss Hamilton favored the selection of Miss Mary Harris, at present superintendent of the New Jersey Institution for Feeble-Minded Women and formerly in charge of reformatories.

"A year and a half ago, in October, 1920, Miss Hamilton presented her resignation herself on account of ill health and saked that it should take effect in June, 1922. The board at that time refused to accept the resignation, hoping that Miss Hamilton's health would improve. Unfortunately, it has steadily grown worse and she was unable to return to the school last fall until two months after the school was opened.

"After she had been at the school two months she presented her resignation again and, as recorded on the minutes of that meeting, said that she would either continue at the school and resign in June or, if the board preferred, she would leave the school immediately and take a rest until October, 1922, and return for the year 1922-28.

"The board decided, on account of her health, to accept her resignation in June. This action was taken unanimously by all the members of the board. As a member of that board I have but one vote. As proof of my appreciation of Miss Hamilton's work at the school we voted $10,000 to be given to Miss Hamilton, the payment to be distributed over five years.

Objections to Miss Harris, Miss
Thomas explained, was because it was felt that her work for some years among feeble-minded women and unruly children had put her "out of touch" with the education of normal children.

The meeting in Baltimore was called by Bishop John Gardner Murray. It was asserted there that Miss Thomas had threatened to destroy the Bryn Mawr School unless she could have her way in managing it, and that the prop-

"The statements attributed to Miss Hamilton are entirely incorrect," said Miss Thomas, "and Miss Hamilton would not have made them if she had not been nervously broken down and ill.

"She and I have worked together on the Bryn Mawr School Board for twenty-six years with harmony unbroken. I recommended her to the school board for the position of headmistress in 1896 and she has made a splendid success of the school.
