DREAMLAND ADVENTURES

Jack and Janet are taking an adventure by the King of the Fairies—on an adventure in which they help to tame a fierce old giant.

CHAPTER I A Call to Adventure DARK night had fled before the rising Sun. So had the mists of Dawn. The day had come bright and clear.

Jack and Janet. He saw them slumbering. The Sun didn't like that. He wanted folks awake and happy while he was shining. He sent one of his beams dancing on Jack's eyes. He sent another beam dancing on Janet's eyes. Jack's eyes popped open. So did Janet's.

"It is very early," thought Jack. "The roosters are still crowing and they crow long before the morning whistles blow. I'll take another little snooze."

Janet, in the bungalow next door, thought the very same thought. And like Jack, she snuggled down for a few more winks.

Jack had scarcely closed his eyes when a musical humming brought them open in a hurry. A humming bird had darted in the window and hung poised over his head. As he sat up the humming bird flashed out of the window and across the yard to Janet's room. Janet's eyes widened open.

"Why, good morning, Prince Flitter-Flash!" cried Janet. "The morning whistles blow, I'll take another little snooze."

Prince Flitter-Flash danced off toward the woods as if to lead them there. "Prince Flitter-Flash wants us to follow him," cried Jack to Janet. "Let's dress and hurry after him."

So they did. Prince Flitter-Flash led them toward the Fairy bower, stopping above a bunch of flowers. Jack and Janet looked down and there among the flowers were the magic fairy caps. The children, with a cry of joy, donned the magic fairy caps. Now I bid you hasten to the Fairy court with me, for my father, King Hummer, wishes to take you on a very exciting adventure.

This was good news to Jack and Janet, and they eagerly followed Prince Flitter-Flash. He arose on his wings, darted over a high, thick wall of shrubbery and alighted in the Fairy court. There sat King Hummer on his six-throne. Around him were dozens of fairies. Crowding the lawn were scores of the Queen People of the forest—oddlily shaped and oddly dressed little men and women.

"The top of the morning to you!" cried King Hummer, when he saw Jack and Janet. "I have an adventure for you—an exciting adventure! Giant
