Deluded Wives

Judith Carlisle and Lucy Randolph are deluded wives. Judy thinks it enough to cook her husband's meals and mend his clothes; Lucy does not think it necessary to compete with other women in order to hold her husband's attention.

Daddy's folk were glad to see her marry Jack. Jack was all right all round. Also he knew not only how to earn money, but how to keep it.

Rand's Decision

She sent Rand out into the night with a smile on her lips and a pain like a knife thrust in her heart. Never once had she let him suspect how she was suffering, for she had been strong, she had not yielded, and she tried to console herself afterward with the memory of that, as she lay where she had flung herself, face downward on the pillows of her couch.
