Bert Lytell to Play FOR THE FILM FAN'S SCRAPBOOK in "To Have and to Hold" PERT LYTELL, for the past several years a star and one of the most gaged to play the leading male role in George Fitzmaurice's new production.
"To Have and to Hold," adapted by Oulda Bergere from the novel by Mary Johnston: Mr. Lytell will leave shortly for Hollywood, where Mr. Fitzmaurice is completing his preparations for starting the production at the Lasky Studio. The cast for "To Have and to Hold" promises to be one of the most notable to be seen in a picture in some time. Betty Compson will play the romantic heroine and Theodore Kosloff and Theodore Roberts will be seen in important parts.

Baby Marie Osborne We will be glad to publish the pictures of such screen players as are suggested by the

DREAMLAND ADVENTURES

Flour White By DADDY

In this week's story Jack and Janet go to Birdland, where they have a strange adventure with mysterious strangers—an adventure that leads to funny happenings.

CHAPTER 1 Mysterious Strangers

WAKE up! Wake up! Wake up! W Thus sang Cocky and Merry Robin as the Sun peeped smilingly over the edge of the eastern hills. "Wake up! Wake up! And come to the party!"

o the party Jack and Janet did not need to be called again after hearing that tempting word "party." They jumped out of bed, washed their faces, brushed their teeth, hopped into their clothes, and ran out of doors.

"Hurry up! Hurry up! Hurry up!"
sang the Robins from a tree in the yard. To help Jack and Janet along birds turned from Jack and Janet and they dropped at the children's feet two magic fairy caps. Jack and Janet clapped the caps on their heads and in an instant they were changed into tiny fairies floating on gauzy wings.

"Are we really going to a party?" asked Janet as she and Jack flitted close behind the guiding Robins. "I never heard of a party in the morn-

"Why is it queer?" demanded Cocky Robin. "Isn't a party a happy time?" "Yes." admitted Jack. "And the bright, sparkling morning is the very happiest time of day for is, so why isn't it a good time a party?"

didn't have an answer for that, but Janet had another question

"Where is the party and what is it for?"
"The party is in the council hall of Birdland," replied Merry Robin. "It is a welcoming party to the Mysterious White Strangers."

Jack and Janet never heard of the Mysterious White Strangers. "Who are they?" seked Janet.

"That is for you to guess," chuckled Cocky Robin. At that moment they reached the council hall of Birdland. The hall—an open, grassy clearing in the midst of the woods—was crowded with joyous, warbling birds.

"Hail! Hail! Cheer! Cheer! How-dee-do! How-dee do!" Thus sang the birds in greeting.

The sight was marvelous. The spell of the magic fairy caps made Jack and Janet see with fairy eyes. To them the birds were not birds at all—they were queer little flying men and women dressed in soft clothes of many colors. ors. Some were red, some were yel-low, some were blue, some were brown, some were gray, some were speckled. Dancing and frolicking on the lawn, they made a pretty picture-prettier than any fancy dress ball Jack and faced a curtain of vines at one end of the council hall. "Hail to the Mys-terious White Strangers." From behind the curtain stalked a large white bird-white from head to face. This strange white bird was fol-lowed by a second, and then came others, until there were ten, all just

"To be sure we are going to a party," chirped Merry Robin. "Birds usually hold their parties in the morning."

"That is a queer time for parties."

"No." answered Janet. "Rut I nere were ten, all just alike.
"Can you guess what they are?"
whispered Cocky Robin to Jack and Janet.
"No." answered Janet. "Rut I Janet. "No." auswered Janet. "But I

"No." answered Janet. "But I don't like their beady brown eyes."
"Neither do I." buzzed the tiny voice of Hummer, the Fairy King. who appeared suddenly beside them. "Neither do I like their eyes. And when fairies and children do not like the eyes of birds or beasts or humans there must be a reason. We will put our wits together and solve the mystery of these Mysterious White Strangers."
