DAZZLE OF COLOR ON "WOODEN WAY"

Palm Sunday Promenade in Atlantic City Marked by Variety of Styles

NEARLY 500 IN BATHING

Special Dispatch to Evening Public Ledger—Atlantic City, April 10.—Variety in the way of hats and gowns, in a veritable rainbow of colors, enlivened the Boardwalk promenade yesterday. Every type in popular styles was observed. The 75,000 or more Palm Sunday visitors here displayed splashes of vividness, indicative of growing favoritism of the gayer tints.

The expanse was thronged. It was visual evidence of prosperity reigning in holiday. Leaders in social sets of many cities were recognized here and there.

The weather was perfect. The mercury went over 80 degrees, mild for the season and delightful for the outing, while the sky was almost unclouded with clouds. One thing noticeable was the almost entire withdrawal of fur coats, the maids and matrons substituting top and sport coats, long cloth coats, cloaks and capes.

Novel costumes that claimed attention were the tall-cut suits, and a feature of some was a large, floppy, fashioned of the same cloth, which, because of its scarcity, appeared to be an innovation which was bidding for mildy's fancy.

As to hat trimming, clusters of grapes and cherries were often seen, there were some with garlands on them; and others with bands worked in flowers. Purple in hats was the shade which was conspicuous, although, by the most popular. As to shapes they were of all droops and tilts, with the flared-front frequently met.

One in Cream-Colored Flannel

The mild sensation of the afternoon was a young matron, tall and athletic, built, suggestive of a vigorous exercise on the golf links, who carefully swung along with semi-masculine stride, in an outfit of cream-colored flannel. She wore a very noticeable straw hat with wide and white brim, tinted red. White shoes and hosiery completed her attire, and she carried a parasol.

Same Fashion Apparently has Decreased

That the Easter is passed, as the predominance of the color of the outfits for the climaxed Lenten season display. The big attraction here was the bizarre touch given the majority of the costumes—the amount of color that could be worked into a single display and still appear attractive.

The fair ones have "fallen hard" for the new sports wear that runs in swirling stripes or inch-square checks, with six-inch fringes at the bottom of the skirts and the capes that appeared to have a part in all the ballroom. The skirts were of knee length, affording wide display of bright-hued hosiery. The new "saddle" sport shoe of two colors and the black ankle-strapped slipper were largely the vogue.

The coat of many colors was seen everywhere, broad dark red or blue stripes alternating with white or other shades, with "trick" head effects carried out in Indian designs about the sleeves.

Pollu Blue Most Popular

The longer cape suits apparently had been manufactured from blanket goods and were close to the sensational in their color schemes. The linings that flapped to the breast generally were of a single hue—bright red, yellow or blue. The most popular solid shade was the pollu blue, the soft sky-blue that permitted of sharp contrasts in hosiery and hats.

The floppy-brimmed hats came back with their flower decorations, but the flapper liked the close-fitting toques with alternating stripes of straw and ruffled silk, the straw usually matching the basic color of the garb.

The knickers were decidedly among the present, the sub-deb particularly taking advantage of the style. Bobbed-haired damsels in their teens appeared in droves with the tweed knickers in blues, grays and softer tones of red. Still sport attire usually were carried by the smiling misses.

Nearly 500 in Bathing

Tons of flowers found their part in the gaily caparisoned host of parades that enjoyed the bright sunshine from 10 o'clock until darkness, when the first excursions started steaming away from the stations.

Close to 500 bathers of both sexes capered about on the beach and took their ocean plunges while volunteer lifeguards from the regular beach patrol kept an alert eye on them. On the upper and central beaches the evidence bathing suits were much in evidence.

The motor travel Saturday and yesterday was the heaviest of the season, and extraordinary traffic measures were necessary to handle the situation.

EMORY TITMAN'S MOTHER IS DEAD

Widow of Penn Reduction Company President Succumbs to Heart Attack at Shore

Special Dispatch to Evening Public Ledger—Atlantic City, April 10.—Mrs. Elizabeth Frances Titman, widow of Charles Titman, for many years president of the Penn Reduction Company and mother of Emory Titman, the Philadelphia Athletics heavyweight baseball player, died last night at her shore home, 208 South Vermont avenue. Mrs. Titman, who was sixty-five years old, was stricken with heart attack Saturday night while preparing for a walk along the Boardwalk.

In addition to her son, Mrs. Titman is survived by a daughter, Mrs. Lillian E. Green, of Philadelphia; a sister with whom she lived, and four grandsons. The remains will be taken to Philadelphia for burial beside her husband.

Losing his balance while painting a big sign at Missouri avenue and the Boardwalk yesterday, Thomas Grace, nineteen years old, fell from the scaffold on which he was working to the Boardwalk, seventy-five feet below.

Promenaders who saw the man tumbling through the air rushed to his aid. At the Atlantic City Hospital he was found to have broken both arms, his right shoulder blade and several ribs. Physicians are hopeful of his recovery.

Noted Alienist Victim of Drugs

New York, April 10.—(By A. P.)—Dr. William H. Hicks, fifty of Newark, N. J., widely known alienist, yesterday was removed from a train at the Pennsylvania station to Bellevue Hospital, suffering from an overdose of drugs, according to physicians who examined him. His condition was said to be serious. He was discovered unconscious by a Pullman porter.

CAMDEN MAN DIES WHILE DRESSING

South Second Street Resident Stricken as He Prepares for Church

MAN RUN DOWN BY AUTO

While dressing to go to church yesterday morning, William Pilkington, sixty-eight years old, of 456 South Second street, Camden, was fatally stricken with a heart attack. A granddaughter, Eleanor Pilkington, heard Pilkington fall and found him unconscious.

Neighbors summoned a physician, but Pilkington was pronounced dead. Coroner Holl said death was due to heart disease.

Struck at Mount Ephraim avenue and Everett street, Camden, by an automobile yesterday, Stanley Kirwitski, thirty-three years old, of 1473 Mount Ephraim avenue, Camden, received a severe laceration of the scalp. Harry Gerson, of 1902 North Thirty-first street, Philadelphia, driver of the car, took the injured man to the Homeopathic Hospital and reported the accident to the police. Gerson said Kirwitski stepped from a moving trolley car. The injured man declared this statement to be untrue. The autoist furnished bail pending an investigation.

Palm Sunday was observed yesterday in Catholic, Protestant and Episcopal churches in Camden. At the 7 o'clock mass in the Church of the Sacred Heart members of Camden Council, Knights of Columbus, received holy communion in a body. The mass was celebrated by the Rev. Dr. J. B. McCloskey, pastor.

Blessed palm was distributed at the closing masses in the Catholic churches of the city. Similar ceremonies were conducted in Episcopal churches. Special musical programs and appropriate sermons were heard in all the Protestant churches.

Falling from a barge at a shipyard in Point street, Camden, yesterday, Harry Cummings, twelve years old, of 123 Erie street, Camden, fractured his skull. The injured boy was carried to the office of Dr. Walter S. Bray, and then taken to Cooper Hospital. His condition is critical.

In falling from a bicycle, on which he was learning to ride, yesterday, Francis Stewart, ten years old, of 322 Arch street, Camden, received a laceration of the scalp. He was treated at Cooper Hospital.

Holy Week noonday services will be conducted throughout the week in the First Baptist and Union Methodist Episcopal Churches, Camden. Camden pastors will address the meetings.

Joseph Cuppi, of Harlem, New York, was arrested late Saturday night by Chief of Police Bretweiser, of Clementon, N. J., charged with entering houses. Clementon had experienced many thefts recently and Chief Bretweiser was on the watch for suspicious characters. Saturday night he saw Cuppi trying the door of several houses. Cuppi, Bretweiser says, was forcing the door of a house on Garfield avenue, when he surprised him and made the arrest. Cuppi was taken to Camden.

As he was preparing to attend church services yesterday, William Pilkington, sixty-eight years old, of 456 South Second street, Camden, fell dead. Coroner Holl issued a certificate of death from heart trouble. Pilkington lived alone, but his twelve-year-old granddaughter, Eleanor Quillin, of Clayton, was visiting him. In another room she heard a noise as if William had fallen and found him on the floor helpless. Neighbors found the man dead.

Thomas Kinzel, of Howardville, Pa., was sentenced to four months in the County Prison by Recorder Stackhouse on the charge of carrying concealed deadly weapons.

Joseph Amosco, 235 North Sixty-fourth street, Philadelphia, forfeited a bond of $25,000 in Camden for violation of the traffic regulations and driving without a license.

Chicago, April 10.—(By A.
