

DREAMLAND ADVENTURES Flour White By DADDY

Coming to U. S. A.

Underwood & Underwood. MISS MAUD ROYDEN

Jack and Janet go to a Birdland party, held in honor of Mysterious White Strangers. Nests are robbed of their eggs and Jack and Janet find smears of white on the edges of the nests, which make them suspect the Mysterious White Strangers.

CHAPTER IV Three Tests Fail HOW can we prove that the white color of the Mysterious White Strangers is not their real color? asked the Fairy King of Jack and Janet.

That was a question they could not answer right away. As they thought it over in their heads, Jack's glasses happened to rest on a pool at the edge of the little brook that trickled past the Birdland council hall.

"Birds like to splash in the water," he whispered to the others. "Let us turn the dancing party into a splashing party. If white is not the real color of the Strangers, it will be washed off when they splash."

That seemed a fine plan. The Fairy King whispered it into the ear of King Bird. "Splish! Splish!" Let a splash of water splash on the edge of the pool. The Mysterious White Strangers did not join in the splashing. Instead they drew further away from the pool so that none of the flying drops might touch them.

"They are afraid of water," whispered the Fairy King. "We must try some other test."

Purple Swallow was rushing about, fluttering his wet feathers. Janet, looking at him, saw a way to test the color of the Mysterious White Strangers. "Purple Swallow," she whispered to him. "Please bump into the Mysterious White Strangers."

Purple Swallow did as she asked. Rumpity-Butter he went tumbling among the Mysterious White Strangers. They burst out angry books, but he frisked quickly away. On his dark coat, however, were smears of white, where he had touched the Strangers.

Jack and Janet and the Fairy King now knew for sure the white smears had come from the Strangers and that white was not their true color.

"Watch the Fairy King now," whispered the Fairy King to Policeman Blue Jay. "If one of them gets out of line tell me." Blue Jay nodded and called other policemen to help him.

"There are three ways to tell the color of the strange bird," said the Fairy King to Jack and Janet. "By his color, by the way he flies, and by his voice."

The Fairy King forgot to speak of his form, too. "The color of these birds is very queer. If we can get them to fly, perhaps we can tell who they are."

"Let's have a flying race," cried Jack. He thought the Mysterious White Strangers would be anxious to show how fast they could fly. All the birds hurried into the race, eager to try their speed—all except the Mysterious White Strangers. They sat still and silent.

"Let's have a singing contest," cried Janet, knowing how proud birds were of their songs. All the birds quick racing and began to sing. They filled the woods with their melody. Every bird sang joyously the song that was in him—every bird except the Mysterious White Strangers. They never made a sound.

"This proves they dare not reveal who they are," said the Fairy King. "We will have them arrested as robbers."

But before the king could act, came more shrieks from mother birds who had hurried home for another look at their nests.

"We have been robbed again," shrieked the mother birds. "More of our eggs are gone."

Jack and Janet looked quickly at the Mysterious White Strangers. All of them were in a row under the eyes of

Uncommon Sense : Selling Yourself Short By JOHN BLAKE

TO A young man complaining that he was underpaid for the work he was doing a corporation official said:

"It is better for you if this company thinks that you are not getting enough than if it thinks you are getting too much. If you are underpaid now you will be adequately paid by and by. If you are overpaid you will soon be out of a job."

The man who is continually seeking higher pay, irrespective of whether he is earning it or not, sometimes gets it, but he seldom keeps it.

He is selling himself short, which, in stock market language, means selling something he hasn't got.

And as soon as his employer discovers that he hasn't got it, there is a change in the occupant of the position.

CONSTANTLY, men whose reputations are not backed up by ability sell their services at a price for more than they are worth.

Just as constantly these men are being invited to get off the payroll; they have been overloading.

The best way toicker for a raise of pay is to make yourself a valuable asset that the employer cannot afford to refuse you a raise of pay.

Continually trying to sell yourself short will only earn you a reputation for chronic dissatisfaction. And if by a miracle you should get it, it will not last very long.

Little Benny's Notebook By Lee Pope

Mr. Parkins took my sister Gladdis out this afternoon, and when they came back he invited me to stay for supper on account of supper being ready and his still setting there. And we all went in the dining room and pop came down with 4 and a half scratches on his face on account of his having been shaving it again with his new strafe razor, ma saying, Willyum, look at your face.

In no contentionist, sed pop. And he sat down and ma sed to Mr. Parkins, Mr. Parkins, wa do you think of a man that insists on using a strafe razor, just because somebody gave it to him altho he indanger his life every time he uses it, just look at his face.

I invariably use a strafe razor myself, Mr. Potts, and I never cut myself, sed Mr. Parkins.

As that so? sed pop as if it didnt make any differnts to him.

Absolutely, look at my face, sed Mr. Parkins.

I saw it, sed pop, and Mr. Parkins sed, You indeed, I dont see why anybody needs to cut themselves with a strafe razor, wa I wouln't think of using anything but a strafe razor and look at my face.

I did, sed pop, and Mr. Parkins sed, Its veely very simple, you merely haf to know how, thats all, its a meer matter of knowing how, I used my strafe razor only this morning and look at my face.

It still looks the same to me, sed Pop. And he kept on getting without saying anything, and Mr. Parkins kept on talking but not about his face, on account of properly thinking pop was tired of hearing about it.

Which he probably was.

Polliceman Blue Jay and his officers, Jack and Janet counted. One, two, three, four, five, six, seven, eight, nine, ten. Every one was there.

Were the Mysterious White Strangers innocent of stealing eggs? If they hadn't robbed the nests, who had done it?

(In tomorrow's chapter the mystery deepens as they Jack and Janet think of a way to clear it up.)

Adventures With a Purse THERE is little so discouraging as to pick up the kitchen knife to cut bread or to slice meat, and find that its edge of pristine sharpness has become sadly blunted. I know of but one mitigating circumstance. That is if you have one of those knife sharpeners that can be attached right to the edge of the kitchen table or to the window sill, and be kept there permanently. I cannot very well describe it, except to tell you that it is small and unobtrusive, and will not be in the way when you don't want it, while it will be waiting patiently for you when you do. Its price is fifty cents.

This week I seem to have run across a lot of things for the children. I am always glad to pass along such information to you, for I believe a mother is always glad when she can learn of some inexpensive little toy that will amuse. Today I write of the surprise sticks. They are the size of those very large sticks of candy, and are made of gummi marbe. One end can be opened, and from it will tumble out all sorts of funny and quite fascinating toys. There are five or six toys in a stick, which can be bought for thirty-five cents.

Delay Monument Dedication Edward Robins, secretary of the Sesqui-Centennial Exhibition Association, has received word from Major General James H. Wilson, of Wilmington, Del., that the dedication of the Caesar Rodney monument will have to be postponed because of the illness of the artist. The dedication had been set for July 4, of this year, at Wilmington. Caesar Rodney was from Delaware, and was one of the signers of the Declaration of Independence, having made a historic ride to this city to be in time to affix his name to the document.

When Will There Be A Disarmament of Dining Tables? Suppose everybody would recognize the fact that there's no gain but much loss in keeping up hostilities with the stomach! Suppose the ancient aggravation of improper food on indignant digestive organs should be settled with guarantees of sensible diet and tranquil digestion! The saving would be beyond all possibility of counting. Yet millions go on declaring war on the stomach and accepting war in return—loading up on starchy, heavy, unbalanced and highly-seasoned food at breakfast or lunch—and wondering why comfort, happiness and efficiency are out of reach. Grape-Nuts makes a friend of the taste and an ally of the stomach. There's a charm and satisfaction to this delicious food which prompts appetite to say, "There's a meal!" and digestion to answer, "Thank goodness, here's peace at last!" Grape-Nuts is the perfected nutriment of wheat and malted barley—sweet, crisp, and wonderfully nourishing. It digests quickly, and provides the necessary elements, including the vital mineral salts, for body, nerve and brain.
