

FIGHTS FOR LIFE WITH GIANT APE

Toledo Zoo Keeper is Terribly Mangled Before Animal is Killed by Workmen

FIGHT MADDENS ELEPHANT

Toledo, O., April 21.—Tony, said to be the largest ape in captivity, was killed in the Wallbridge Park Zoo yesterday after he had attacked and severely injured Louis Sherer, a keeper.

Babe, a giant elephant, driven wild by the excitement, was trumpeting and clashing furiously about the elephant house late last night trying to break ankle chains which are anchored to piles sunk deep into the ground. Outside a dozen policemen are on guard with heavy elephant guns, ready to shoot him if he breaks out.

The ape, which had been noticeably morose and untractable for several days, attacked Sherer when the keeper entered his cage to feed him. He was squatting on a trapeze as Sherer entered. The heavy body of the ape suddenly tumbled down and landed on the shoulders of the keeper. Clinging and biting and screaming, Tony bore Sherer to the ground.

Protects His Throat
The keeper threw his arm across his throat as he fell and thus kept the animal's teeth away from his jugular vein, the first point of attack. But the ape ripped and tore at the man's head and arm, slicing the flesh as with a knife. Sherer managed to reach his feet after the first shock and while he guarded his own throat with one hand, with the other he tried to reach the throat of the ape to choke him into submission.

But the ape was too strong. He drove the man back against the bars of the cage. Outside, on the ground and lying against one of the bars, was a stick. Sherer got one hand through the bars, picked it up and, with his free hand, began smashing the skull of the brute. The blows had little, if any, effect. The first one staggered the ape, but it recovered and returned to the attack before Sherer could knock it down. Thereafter, although Sherer smashed steadily at the thick skull, the ape forced the keeper back and finally through the door of the cage into the park.

Leaps to Auto Top
With the ape clutching him in both arms, biting and clawing, Sherer staggered from the monkey quarters into the park, in the midst of a crowd of sight-seers, attracted by the sounds of battle. Other keepers had come up, but the ape and the keeper were struggling so swiftly and were so closely intertwined they could do nothing. Finally the ape released Sherer as suddenly as he had attacked. Dropping the man unconscious to the ground, it leaped to the top of an automobile, where it sat grimacing and screaming in rage. Other keepers took up the battle, and one of them hit the ape with a spade just as it was about to spring at him. Another smashed it on the skull with a pickax. It slid unconscious from the top of the car, and Patrolman Hennessy shot it through the brain. Sherer was hurried to Mercy Hospital, where it was said he would probably recover, although badly mangled and very weak from loss of blood.

The uproar attending the struggle penetrated as far as the elephant house, where it put the finishing touches to the nervous frenzy into which the big elephant Babe had been whipping himself for several days, and Sherer was the only keeper who could control him. Babe went completely crazy within half an hour after Sherer, unconscious, was sent to the hospital. Keepers tried to calm him, but he got worse. The police sent to the gun stores and got all the elephant rifles in the city and the best marksmen on the force surrounded the elephant house to wait for the brute to burst forth. The authorities will not kill Babe unless he breaks his chains.

How do you judge shoes?

Most people don't. They judge prices. But that is like the tail wagging the dog, instead of the dog wagging the tail. There's much more to a shoe than the price. There's leather, of course. There's workmanship, certainly. There's style. And there's fitting.

It would take years to learn to judge leather and good workmanship expertly. You've got to depend upon the reputation of the maker of the shoes for those things. You are the judge of style or pattern. When it comes to a shoe-fitting, it's important to accept the advice of one who knows.

These two big Walk-Over shops know what that service means to you.
