DREAMLAND ADVENTURES

The Bear on Ice
By DADDY

Jack and Janet are taken by Perky Squirrel to ask for cure where Cold Nose, a bear, has been taking his winter sleep. She lies in the cave makes Cold Nose sleep overtime. Jack and Janet wake him up. He is so hungry he chases them.

CHAPTER IV
A Vanishing Trick

JACK did a wise thing when he threw the flopping fish in front of the hungry bear.

The bear liked fish. He liked fish much better than he did little girls or boys. Indeed, he probably wouldn't have thought of eating Jack or Janet if he hadn't been so very, very hungry after his long winter sleep. He hadn't eaten a thing for months, living during that time on his own fat. No wonder he was ready to gobble any food in sight—a boy or a girl or a fish.

The bear stopped to eat the fish. While he ate, Jack boosted Janet into a tree and followed quickly after her. Perky Squirrel frisked ahead urging them to hurry.

"Wau-ugh! That fish tasted good," grunted Cold Nose, licking his chops. "It has made me hungrier than ever. I wonder where that nice boy and sweet girl went to." He glanced around and then up. He saw Jack and Janet high in the tree.

"Wau-ugh!" grunted the bear. "Wau-ugh, so you thought you could get away from me by climbing a tree. Wau-ugh! Don't you know that a bear can climb a tree as good as a boy and better than a girl. Wau-ugh! I'll show you."

Cold Nose rose on his hind legs, waddled to the tree and mounted upward. He was stiff after his winter sleep in the icy cold. His joints creaked and he was very slow. But slow as he was, he kept mounting, foot by foot.

'Ek! Climb higher!" squeaked Perky Squirrel to Jack and Janet. They climbed on until they were among the tip-top branches. They could'nt go a bit further.

"Ek! Jump to another tree!" advised Perky Squirrel. He showed them the way, running out on a swaying limb and leaping far out. He sailed through the air, alighting among the branches of another tree. "Come on! It is easy!" he urged.

But Jack and Janet knew what was easy for a squirrel was impossible for a boy and a girl.

"Wau-ugh!" grunted Cold Nose beneath them. "Wau-ugh! I am slow but sure. You can't escape me!"

Jack and Janet were in despair. What should they do? Jack braced himself among the branches. He would fight to the last. When Cold Nose's snout came close enough he would kick it.

At that moment Janet's sharp eyes spied something flitting among the flowers in the woods below them.

"Humming birds!" she cried. "Perhaps they are our friends the fairies!" Then she raised her voice in a cry for help.

"Fairies! Fairies, come to our aid. Flitter-Flash and Fairy King, save us from this hungry bear."

The humming birds darted away at Janet's first cry. Perhaps they were only humming birds after all and not fairies in disguise. Hope fled with them. Jack swung back his foot ready to kick the bear's nose.

Then there was a flash past Jack's eyes. He glanced up. There were humming birds—a dozen of them in two groups. One group held a blue flower over Janet's head. The other held a bluebell over Jack's head.

While Jack was looking up, Cold Nose mounted higher. His jaws opened. He grabbed at Jack's foot.

Just then the fairies dropped the two blue flowers. The blue flowers were magic fairy caps. They turned Jack and Janet into tiny fairy-like creatures buzzing about on gauzy wings.

The bear's jaw closed on empty air. He wasn't going to breakfast on a nice boy and a sweet girl that day.

(In the next chapter the bear goes fishing, and so does a freckled-faced boy. The boy has a startling adventure.)

JASCHA HEIFETZ RECITAL

Great Russian Violinist Appears in Excellent Program

Jascha Heifetz, the great Russian violinist, appeared at the Academy of Music last evening in his final Philadelphia recital of the year. It was probably the first time since he has been on the concert platform that he has not appeared to an overflowing house in Philadelphia. As it was there was a good-sized audience present.

Mr. Heifetz played with the marvelous certainty that always characterizes his work. There was that same impeccable intonation, no matter where on the fingerboard he was playing; that perfect co-ordination of finger and bow in which he is unapproachable among modern violin virtuosi, and the dexterity of the left hand, which makes all technical difficulties appear not to exist for him. He is the incarnation of perfect violin playing in all the technical possibilities of the instrument.

His program was well suited to display those characteristics in which he is pre-eminent. He began with the Lalo Symphonie Espagnol, and played as his other principal numbers the Rondo Capriccio of Saint-Saens and the D major Polonaise of Wieniawski. As another number he played a group consisting of Bach's aria for the G string, a "vivace" of Haydn transcribed by Auer; the Lensky aria from Eugen Onegin of Tschaikowsky and the Ries Perpetual Motion. Among his best-liked encores were the Guitarre of Moszkowski and the Melodie from the suite of violin and piano of Tschaikowsky. In the matter of interpretation Mr. Heifetz shows a continuous improvement, and plays with more discrimination and a better adjusted temperament with each successive appearance here.

Sewer-System Extensions Approved

The State Department of Health has announced approval of extensions to the municipal sewer system of this city in line with recent applications by city officials. Approvals for extensions were also granted to Doylestown and Upper Darby systems.

TWILIGHT LEAGUE TROPHIES
