HOUSING SURVEY

Speakers at the annual banquet of the American Hotel Association at Atlantic City last night took up the subject of the Sequel-Centennial Exposition, the undertaking and the support of hotelmen throughout the United States.

The dinner at the Traymors was a feature of the annual convention and exhibition of the hotelmen at the seaside resort and was attended by 300 hotelmen. Edward M. Tierney, president of the hotel association, toastmaster, commented upon the progress of the exposition and the Philadelphia world's fair and bespoke hearty co-operation of the directors.

M. Staller made an address and related his own experience in three previous expositions of work as a hotel manager. He offered the suggestion to professional hotelmen that they endeavor to prevent the overbuilding of hotels for the Philadelphia fair. "I have had considerable knowledge of the hotel business," said Mr. Staller, "and my experience is that promoters and operators of hotels go now at Philadelphia. I would like to suggest to the directors of the Sequel-Centennial that they have a thorough survey made at a fairly early date of the housing accommodations in Philadelphia, including existing hotels, and additions to such hotels and new housing facilities."

After such a survey is made, some representative data can be available on which to base new or temporary housing projects. If there is overbuilding of hotels, no matter what the fair attendance, there is bound to be a recession afterward."

Victor Rosewater, assistant to the president of the Exhibition Association, also spoke. He outlined the progress of the exposition plans to date, proposed future developments and the attendance expected.

Plans are virtually completed for the dedication Tuesday of the old City Hall in Independence Square as a prelude to the series of historical celebrations that will terminate in the fair grounds.

Chief Justice Taft and other members of the United States Supreme Court are expected to attend. The old City Hall, completed in 1791, was erected from the proceeds of a lottery instituted in 1786, ordered by the Mayor. It cost $12,500,000. One-half of the proceeds went to Dickinson College.

Finger prints, taken at the time of an interview with Duncan and compared with those found on the body of the unknown man, furnished another link in the chain of evidence.

Duncan was the only one of twenty-five soldiers questioned who was able to describe his exact movements on the night of Gregor's disappearance, and for that reason was not eliminated from the case.

GREYER L. DUNCAN SAYS HE SLEW SERGEANT GREYER SEPTEMBER 9 IN SELF-DEFENSE

Grever Landis Duncan, a Camp Dix soldier, has confessed the murder of a comrade, Michael Greger, last September.

Greger disappeared from the camp the night of September 9, following a day when he had failed to qualify on the rifle range. Members of his company believed he had become despondent and had deserted, and he was carried on the company records as a deserter.

December 3 three gunners found his body in the woods two miles from the barracks. Two bullet holes were in the head and tracks leading to the timber in which the body was found showed that it had been dragged a long distance.

Duncan was arrested January 19, following an investigation by County Detective Ellis Parker. Parker discovered that warrants for Duncan's arrest had been issued in his home town, Winlock, Tenn., on charges of carrying weapons and felonious assault.

Further investigation disclosed the gun missing from the supply room at Camp Dix.

The weapon had been turned over by Duncan to a friend at home, who in turn had passed it on to a third person. A search through two States was necessary.

DIXIAN CONFESSES MURDER OF SOLDIER

Prosecutor Kelcey yesterday refused to disclose the details of the confession. He said Duncan claims he acted in self-defense, following a wordy quarrel due to Greger's irritation at having failed to qualify as a sharpshooter.

After leaving the barracks together on the night of the crime, Duncan says Greger drew his gun. The former snatched it from his hand and picked it up. When Greger attacked him with his club, Duncan fired two shots, both entering the head.

Prosecutor Kelcey promised a speedy disposition of the case. The Grand Jury will be in session next Monday and the prosecutor will ask for immediate indictment and trial.
