Playtime for the Great

To the Editor of the Evening Fublic Ledger:

Sir—I was interested in reading an account of one observer's description of Lloyd Géorge in relaxation at one of the most critical junctures of the Genoa Conference. There came a day when he was free to rest a bit. He went with his family for a drive along the coast and took luncheon in the open air overlooking the sea. After luncheon, we are told, "he walked with exhilarating vigor and enjoyment for some miles down the winding and rugged paths " " He went over sticks and stones at their steepest like a boy. Down below in the fishing village, where everybody recognized him at a cafe table on the open piazza, with painted houses behind him and quays and boats in front, the Prime Minister of the British Empire might have been seen writing postcards for little boys who clamored for his signature. Then in the late afternoon he went hack to work." Playtime for the Great clamored for his signature. Then in the Here is a picture of a man able to throw off the heaviest cares at a moedly into simple, refreshing outdoor en-joyments. The ability to do that is a priceless asset to any person who carries much responsibility. Most of the men who bear the heavier loads are able men who bear the heavier loads are able to do that; if they cannot they break. Cleveland went fishing, Roosevelt went horseback riding, Harding plays golf, Lincoln relapsed into light humor or persifiage, Wilson—what did Wilson do? Was it not the defect in him that prevented him from throwing off his cares and playing simply and naturally that led to his breakdown?

The Radio Bugs

To the Editor of the Evening Public Ledger: Sir-The wisdom of the ancients sent the sluggard to the ant for moral in-struction, and the inquisitiveness of the modern mind turns to the cockroach for scientific information. Our fleetfooted, troublesome friend now bobs up as a possibly important factor in the young possibly important factor in the young science of wireless transmission.

The discovery is due, I read in the newspapers, to Howard Zimmerman, of Harrisburg, who was a sergeant-major in the army during the war and was put on the trail of the cockroach by his investigations in a bug-infested barracks in Luxemburg. The barracks, it is reported, housed a wireless night school, and frequent interruption in the electric wave transmission led to a electric wave transmission led to a search locating a cockroach between the receiving and transmitting appa-ratus. With his removal, the disturb-

These facts, if corroborated, would belief us one star pages to the solution. MILLARD—KIMBALL.

Christmas Tree and "Life Saver" o the Editor of the Evening Public Ledger: Sir—Here is something I read a few days ago from an upholder of the Eight-centh Amendment and the Volstead Enorcement act: "I know of a home in this city where for the first time on Christmas Day.
1910, the children enjoyed a real Christmas. The money the father usually spent for booze was used to give the little ones a Christmas tree." Nobody with an ounce of good feeling will deny that this was a most com-mendable thing for this reformed drunkard to do. But what does this isolated incident prove? There were many similar cases before we gave prohibition a serious thought or dreamed of the Volstend act. Certainly this father referred to could have spent his money for 'booze,' if he so elected his money for "booze," if he so elected in the year 1919, as well as during any of the years preceding that date. This father is to be commended and not the Volstead law.

To the Editor of the Evening Public Ledger: Sir-Might I be permitted to suggest that Sir Conan Doyle employ Sherlock Holmes to unravel some of the mys-teries he has dug up in the spirit world? His sudden reversal of form-from absolute realism to speculative moonshine—leads one to believe that the author, as well as the character, is in the habit of crying: "Quick, Watson—the nealle!"

Delaware River Railroad Bridge o the Editor of the Evening Public Ledger: Sir-I have had an argument with a man in regard to a bridge at Philadelphia, the coains there is a railroad bridge at Philadelphia across to Camden and there has been one for five or ten years. East Petersburg, Pa., April 26, 1922. The Pennsylvania Railroad began work on a bridge across the Delaware River on March 13, 1895. On October 30, 1895, rais-ing of the superstructure was started, and this was finished March 1, 1896. While that work was progressing the necessary land approaches were being prepared. The work was so far completed that on March 9, 1896, less than a year from the time it was begun. a passenger train containing the president, board of directors and prominent executive officers of the Pennsylvania Ratiroad Company passed over the bridge on a tour of in-spection.

The bridge was opened for public traffic

Note and law.

But if it were possible and reasonable to give prohibition credit for the incident, so proudly mentioned by the prohibition booster, is that sufficient reason for turning over the right of several miles north of Camden.

The bridge is for raifrod trains exclusively, no foot or vehicular traffic being permitted. Its location is approximately five miles north of Market street. It starts at Roxborough street, Bridgsburg, in North Phiadelphia, and its terminus. Delair, N. J. is several miles north of Camden.
