PERSONS OF THE STORY
VICTOR STOWELL—The hero of the story...

Lord had sent to take my child out of prison?
A wave of new life seemed to come to her...

CHAPTER XXXVIII
The Grave of a Sin
The quay was deserted and the berth of the tramp steamer in the harbor...

For a moment he lost sight of the ship's stern light as a mist was sweeping over the water...

But in a winding lane, close under the eaves, he came upon a cottage that was lit up in the lower story...

The clock struck twelve. All was quiet. The condemned woman had escaped from Castle Rushen...

Nearly three hours later Stowell was at the Point of Ayre, where the head of the island looks into the sea...

There was a pang in thinking that this was the last he was to see of the two who were aboard of her...

He watched the vessel as she passed. She lurched a little as she went through the cross-current of the Point...

Home once more!
As he slackened speed and slid up the drive the rooks were calling in the tall elms...

CHAPTER XXXIX
The Birth of a Lie
Awakening in the George in the early hours of morning, Fenella heard a noise...

CHAPTER XXXIX
The Birth of a Lie
Awakening in the George in the early hours of morning, Fenella heard a noise...

"Be calm," said Fenella. Bessie has gone out from Castle Rushen. She is not to die this day.

Lord had sent to take my child out of prison?
A wave of new life seemed to come to her...

At the foot of the drawbridge the High Bailiff and the jailer were in fierce altercation.

At length two elderly men, the chaplain and the doctor, came down the stairs and stood in the doorway...

Through a tumult of mixed feelings, Fenella was conscious of a sense of immense relief. Her first thought was of Bessie's mother...

"Jesus, lover of my soul,
Let me to Thy bosom fly,
Where'er that bosom lies,
My heart, my reason, all my soul,
Thou art my choice, my bliss, my joy,
My only consolation."

"I have deceived me!" she cried.
"Seven o'clock they said. Is it all over?"

"I know who thou art. Thou art the Governor's daughter. Is it the truth thou'rt telling me?"

"I know who thou art. Thou art the Governor's daughter. Is it the truth thou'rt telling me?"
