of the Democrats is to keep it before the Senate a long time, but to allow its passage in the end. It is said on good authority that the Democrats mean to prolong the discussion of schedules for wo months more and then allow the bill to pass. This is the program if the tariff retains its present place on the calendar.

The Democrats believe that the Tariff Bill will be unpopular and a source of weakness to the Republican Party in the coming campaign. They wish to discuss it until all its defects are brought home to the voters, and they believe the enactment of it while the compaign is on will be most damaging to those responsible for it. Consequently they do not desire to see the Tariff Bill defeated.
