DREAMLAND ADVENTURES

The Runaway Circus By DADDY

Jack and Janet and circus animals in the woods. The animals have escaped from a wrecked circus train.

CHAPTER VI
A Roar and a Creak
THE roar of the lion shook the air of the forest. It sent a thrill of fear far and wide.

But an answer came to the lion's roar—an unexpected answer. The frogs in the marsh were aroused.

The circus animals never had heard frogs bellowing close. All the beasts had been born and brought up in the menagerie.

Judge Owl had been annoyed when he lost his mouse lunch, which Fangs, the tiger, had eaten.

This hooting, coming from the darkness close at hand, drove the circus animals to the forest.

"Oh-oo-oo-oo!" I wish I were back in my nice snug cage," moaned Fangs, the tiger.

"Oh-ooom-ooom!" When I get back to the circus I never again will want to roam in the awful dark woods!" rumbled Judge Owl.

"We will save you," cried Jack, riding Trizzie into the hollow. He was closely followed by Janet.

The circus animals were delighted to see humans. They felt safer than the elephant, the tiger, the lion, the monkey and all the other beasts.

Into the cages plunged the frightened animals into the cages and back to the life from which they had fled.

As for Jack and Janet they were carried off to the circus.

(Next week Jack and Janet have a thrilling flying adventure).

Sleeves of This Georgette in One With the Bodice

It's a long line that has no turning, and it seems as if the fashionable line or silhouette is gradually giving way to the impulse toward the fuller skirt.
