

In this match Miss McKane won four straight games in the first set. Mademoiselle was seen to place her hand several times in the region of her heart and look appealingly at her father, who was in the stands. It was thought that she would not finish, but Miss McKane began losing games and the heart trouble wore off in the heat of victory.

It was after this match that the Wonder Girl announced she was dubious cerning her entry in the singles at Wimbledon. Her father and her physician had forbidden her to enter, she said.

The statement brought a storm of criticism upon her shoulders in tennis es. Even Mrs. Mallory, who seldom gives interviews moved to words. . . .

" AM extremely disappointed over Mile. Lenglen's failure to defend A her title," said Molla. "I am skeptical regarding her recent statement saying how much she wants to play me again. I don't think she is ready to face me across the tennis net."

Breaks Against Suzanne

THIS did not mean that Mrs. Mallory was overconfident or had an exaggerated opinion of her prowess on the courts. She was bitterly disap-pointed because she made the trip to Europe for the one purpose of showing the world her victory over the marvelous Suzanne at Forest Hills last summer was no fluke.

Mile, Lenglen also was perturbed when she read Molla's statement. 'I will not fight my battles in the columns of the newspapers," she said.

"I shall fight them on the tennis courts." Whether Suzanne has a weak heart, bronchitis, bad colds and other all-ments which would interfere with her playing remains to be seen. We all remember the Forest Hills incident, but apparently have overlooked the fact that Mile. Lenglen stepped off the boat a few days previously, and on the first day, instead of meeting Miss Goss, the latter defaulted and she was pitted against Mrs. Mallory. An ocean voyage is not the best thing in the world for training purposes, and Suzanne probably felt the effects of the trip. Therefore, it might be well to overlook the tournament last year and wait to see what happens at Wimbledon.

Psychology will play an important part in the match if the rivals ever meet. Molla is confident that if there is any one in the world she can beat, it is Suzanne Lenglen. The Norse gir! is a wonderful match player; that is, she plays her best when most is at stake. She plays with a dogged fury, outdriving and outgaming her opponent and does not know the meaning of the word "quit." She is in England now to defeat Mile. Lenglen. That thought is uppermost in her mind.

True, she has been defeated twice, but that is likely to happen to any one. It must be remembered, however, that every time she played the full three sets and was battling hard at the end. She did not retire or discover a weak heart.

SUZANNE never has been defeated in a played out match. That is she never hus gone that far. She usually "retires" before the finale.

French Girl Dreads Defeat

MLLE. LENGLEN has allowed the dread of her possible defeat to become an obsession. Apparently she has allowed this fear to dominate her in the last two years and relapsed into means of avoiding what she would seemingly consider-quite unnecessarily in view of her supremacy-as irreparable disaster which would have otherwise sullied her unchallengeable reputation.

It is quite a long time since Suzanne knew the sorrows of defeat at the hands of a woman opponent, and it is possible that she may have come to think the avoidance of a black mark on her clean sheet compensates for her oss of dignity.

Once upon a time Mile, Lenglen faced the turns of fortune with complete impassivity and had a great reputation for wonderful sportsmanship. Since she became world's champion, however-of the importance of which she seems to have a morbidly exaggerated view-she has become temperamental. That's the story. Mile, Lengien expected to defeat Mrs. Mailory last summer. She had every appearance of a conqueror when she tripped on the courts, acknowledged the hearty applause and prepared to play the serious-faced, sober-minded girl from America.

The tremendous gallery expected a sensational struggle-and it was not isappointed. Suzanne was the picture of grace in her footwork and execution of strokes when the rivals warmed up before the start of the match. She ran from one side of the court to the other and seemed to fly over the ground. the knew the crowd was present and was conscious of its every move and every sound. She loved the applause, . .

IRS. MALLORY, on the other hand, was the picture of grim Mastermination and never gave even a fleeting glance at the huge throng which journeyed out there in the hope that she would leave the field triumphant. She concentrated on one thing-victory-and she played throughout with that characteristic sullen fury and intensity that were as remarkable as Suzanne's dazzling skill.

Draw Against Mlle. Lenglen

THE luck of the draw is against Suzanne at Wimbledon, as it was at Forest Hitls. The Wonder Girl of France will be called upon to meet Mrs. Peasek, Kathleen McKane and Elizabeth Ryan in her bracket, while the only possibly dangerous contender in Mrs. Mallory's half is Mrs. Beamish, who already has been defeated by the American champion.

The thrill of Forest Ilills will be restaged amid different surroundings on different courts. Mile. Lenglen's pride has been hurt and she is to prove she is the best woman tennis player in the world. . .

OLLA makes no claims of greatness, but says she can beat Suconne Lenglen any old time and any old place. May they meet in the finals at Wimbledon! Coveright, 1988, by Public Ledger Company
