

What a glorious day it had been-with parades in the street and diers drilling in the meadow and a sham battle and picnic dinners in the ark and foot races and everything. And now it is night time and the little Dee Dads are just beginning to really and truly enjoy themselves-for after all, fire works are the greatest fun of all.

It has been a proud day for old Nicholas Nutt for he has a brand new miform, with epaulettes on the shoulders and medals in front and he is "The leader of the band." A huge sky rocket, that didn't go up, has just missed him and made a great hole in the big bass drum.

There's Roly, the rascal, peeping over the fence and he has a lighted match in his hand and looks as if he had never intended for the sky rocket to go up in the air. See the two little Doo Dads that are holding on to the skyrocket for dear life, and there is a pussy cat on one too.

See the old soldier at the foot of the statue, standing at attention. He probably thinks it's the battle of Gettysburg being fought all over again.

Sleepy Sam is having a fine nap but Poly has found him and in just a few moments he will be wondering what has happened. Old Doctor Sawbones looks worried for he is afraid he is going to be very much overworked unless the celebration ends soon. Poor old Man Grouch is having his troubles, too, and there are many black eyes and burnt faces and sore hands

This kind of a Fourth of July is all right for the little india rubber Doo Dads, that are never really for truly hurt.
