

FRIENDS FEEDING MINERS' FAMILIES

Service Committee Opens Centers in Bedford County, Pa., and West Virginia

PHILADELPHIANS AIDING

The American Friends' Service Committee, which has done valiant war relief work, is now busy in investigation and relief in the coal strike area in Pennsylvania and West Virginia.

The section in Pennsylvania which is the greatest need is the Deep Run Valley, Bedford County, where, the valley, there are 600 children who need extra feeding.

The relief work is limited to children under fourteen or excepting mother, and nursing infants from central feeding stations, and only those who have been proved to be in an undernourished condition by a doctor's examination receive permission to eat at the feeding station.

One meal a day is served for six days in the week, and only the most nutritious food is given. The staples are corn and rice, fats and pea soup.

Local committees are being organized in each camp, with one man to look after the proper warehousing of supplies which are shipped in, and one to three women, who supervise the preparation and serving of the food.

In West Virginia the physical condition of the children is much worse than in Pennsylvania. There the children are suffering from rickets and softening of the bone caused by undernourishment, reports say.

Some rationing has been done and some relief work by various organizations, but no attempt at systematic feeding has been made before this. Milk is difficult to obtain, and pork and cornmeal are the chief articles of food.

Lucile Halston is the dietitian at Dry Branch, where headquarters are located, and she is assisted by Phillip Furnace and Cyril Harvey, of Earlham College, and Luella Johns, of Iowa University.

"We do not wish to discuss any of the issues involved in the present controversy in the coal industry," said Wilbur Thomas, head of the Service Commission in Philadelphia. "We have undertaken the relief work with an entirely unpartisan motive, and wish only to help the needy families."

Women Occupy Entire Stage for Period in Home Week Celebration Today is girl day in connection with the old home week celebration of the Lions' Club at Gloucester. And the battle the mere man who attempts to edge in on the festivities. No suggestions have been asked and none is wanted, say the leaders.

It is only because his official capacity must be recognized that George D. Patton, president of the City Council and chairman of the celebration, will be allowed to mingle with the ladies. And even he must stand in the offing and furtively peek.

This afternoon various women's organizations and girls' clubs paraded. In order that the men might not trespass along the line of march five policewomen were appointed to the fore, their commissions to expire tonight. Miss Anna Storm was captain. She was assisted by Miss A. Hutchinson, Miss Elizabeth Messenger, Miss Mary Bersteler and Miss E. Hoover.

Tonight a community meeting will be held in front of the City Hall. There will be races and games to which the men are invited.

SWIMMER'S BODY IS FOUND George Lindsay Lost Life Trying to Cross Cooper River The body of George Lindsay, 1012 Oxford street, Philadelphia, who drowned on the evening of the Fourth of July when he became exhausted in trying to swim Cooper River in Camden, was recovered last night by the police.

The body was found about 200 yards from where the drowning occurred. Lindsay, to save time, had tried to swim the stream, which is about 60 feet wide, to get a boat. He had been working at a boat repair colony along the river. He was thirty-two years old and leaves a wife and three small children.

'BIG YONICK' BROUGHT HERE ON A CHARGE OF MURDER

Alleged slayer of Joe Hirst Arrested at Gates of Penitentiary

Samuel Fine, known in criminal circles as "Big Yonick," was brought back to the city today to answer a charge of murder in connection with the killing of Joe Hirst, once lightweight fighter, in a restaurant at Fifth and Bainbridge streets last May.

"Yonick" was found last March serving an eight-months' sentence for burglary in St. Vincent de Paul Penitentiary, Montreal, Canada, through a fingerprint identification.

An he stepped out of the jail at the end of his term on the Fourth of July, County Detectives Ochsle and McGedigan were there to greet him. Examination had been arranged and the detectives started with their prisoner for Philadelphia.

A quarrel over the spoils of a leather robbery at Fourth and Race streets led to the shooting. "Yonick" and "New York Louie" entered the restaurant searching for men who had double-crossed them in the robbery. Hirst became involved in a quarrel and was shot in the back as he was making his way toward a rear door.

He died in the Pennsylvania Hospital without telling who shot him. "That's all right," he had said when questioned. "I'll get that guy myself when I get better."

Hirst's real name was Harsch, and he had lived at Seventh and Pine streets.

TO THE HEAD OF SOME GREAT BUSINESS

Does your letter paper entirely satisfy you? Do you feel no misgivings as to its quality? Do you ever find in your morning's mail letters written on paper so radiantly fine that you rise to it unconsciously, that you compare mentally with your own paper, and blush inwardly at the comparison?

Do you ever look around at your perfectly appointed offices, your fully equipped factory, your trim, clean-cut, well-dressed salesmen, your long list of contented customers, your satisfactory rating in Mr. Dun's big book, and wonder if after all your stationery really represents these things as it should?
