American Open Golf Championship May Be Fourth Win in Row for U.S. Over Great Britain How Does It Strike You? KENSINGTON IS A

Mlle. Lenglen, Weakling at West Side, Was Wonder at Wimbledon Against Mrs. Mallory-Three Consecutive U. S. Victories Over Great Britain

SUPERB Susanne Lenglen is still the Wonder Girl of France, the idol of Europe and the world's champion woman tennis player. On the turf warts of Wimbledon on Saturday she won her way back to acclaim and re-Two games in as many sets were all "Marvelous Molla" could wrest from the composed and confident maid of Paris.

The American champion never was in the running for the laurels she had as her tennis ambition-to beat Suzanne at Wimbledon. Conquered in the arst game of the opening set. Molia never was able to catch the French flash. Susanne was everything she was NOT at Forest Hills, and that's the answer.

Mile, Lenglen darted here and there around the court with the swiftness and fighting spirit of a panther. She outguessed Mrs. Mallory from the start, forcing her in a mad chase after her well-placed returns, pulling her to the set with soft strokes and turning her dismally to the backcourt after her vicious drives to the baseline.

In contrast to the match at Forest Hills, it was the American who breathlessly dashed after the ball and Suzanne who calmly stroked the ball to the exact spot she wanted it to fall. Control and the uncanny skill in placements won for Mile. Lenglen the highest honors attainable in tennis.

The Wonder Girl seemed to anticipate the strokes of the American, for she always was in the correct position to return the Mallory drives, while her counters caught her opponent off balance. It was the greatest exhibition of superior tennis ever given at Wimbledon by a woman player. In short, Suzanne was skillful, superb and sensational.

Prior to her appearance in this country last year it was said of Mile. Lenglen that she was unbeatable, and Americans are ready to believe the colored reports cabled here concerning the marvelous finesse of the world champion

The swift serves of the French flash crumbled Mrs. Mallory's castles in the air, but even in defeat the American stands out brilliantly. She lost. 6-2, 6-0, which is an overwhelming and startling score, but she won in sportsmanship. After her rival gained the final point of the match she rushed to the net and was the first to congratulate her conqueror. She smiled and chatted as she would in a pleasant tete-a-tete in the tearoom. This gained for Mrs. Mallory innumerable friends and admirers in England.

A MERICANS longed for a Mallory triumph and even the gallery was pro-Molla, but the super-tennis of the French maid won its applause and congratulations. And with the Wimbledon gallery pro-Molla, Americans applaud and congratulate the Wonder Girl of France.

Three Consecutive U. S. Wins Over England

FRANCE conquered America at Wimbledon, but the championship was really a triumph of Uncle Sam over Johnny Bull. The last Englishwoman went out when Mrs. Mallory eliminated Mrs. Beamish in the semi-final round. Great Britain in an English tournament had no representative in the final

It was the third victory for America in three big athletic features within the last three weeks. First came the sparkling win of Walter Hagen, a U. S. home-bred, in the British open golf championship, and then on Saturday Walter M. Hoover, a native of Duluth, pulled his oars through the rough waters of the Thames to a world's title in the Diamond Sculls.

The United States has long ruled international track and field sports and is the recognized leader in this branch of athletics. Great Britain has cherished and boasted her golfers and oarsmen. These two sports are Britonborn, so to speak, and within three weeks Uncle Sam has beaten Johnny Bull at his own game and in his own backyard.

American rowing systems and equipment have not been taken seriously in England until recently. Even in this country some of us were prone to look up to English methods and oars. Collegiate crews began to copy styles in Great Britain and coaches trained under Johnny Bull were sought. Now America is stepping out to the front.

Two years ago, when the Annapolis eight-oared shell swept Belgian waters in the Olympics and Jack Kelly gave his wash to the greatest scullers in the world, great prestige was gained for American rowing and additional luster came with the magnificent triumph of Hoover.

HOOVER had to row through choppy waters to gain his victory. In the heat before the semi-final and in the semi-final his oars were bent against wind that was reaching gale velocity, and that was nothing new for the Duluth star. It was akin to rowing on placid waters of an inland lake compared with sculling on Lake Superior, where Hoover learned how to handle a blade.

The words of the veteran Englishman formed a great compliment for Hoover. Beresford, Sr., has seen many great scullers. He saw his son win in the Diamond Sculls two years ago and he saw Jack Kelly triumph over his boy at the Olympics a few months later. We wonder over here if the intended to include Kelly among those who could not match Hoover's father Kelly has defeated Hoover on several occasions, and probably could do it again if he could get back to his form of 1920. The Vesper oarsman is not an old-timer by any means. He still is a young man and athletic. He never allows himself to get far from excellent physical condition and it would not take him long to regain his top form if he cared to give his time to the same, but he claims he has retired for good.

Already Kelly has been urged to challenge Hoover, but so far he has not yielded.

'It is no surprise to me," said the Olympic champion when he heard of Hoover's triumph. "Hoover is a great sculler and I knew he would beat Beresford. He retired after I beat him at Worcester in 1919 and did not re-enter the field until I withdrew from the field. He was not in the Olympic trials of 1920, for, as he said on one occasion, he felt that I was unbeatable. I certainly am glad Hoover won the Diamond Sculls. Every American takes particular delight in seeing a fellow countryman win an international event.

. . . "I DOVER'S laurels are his for good so far as I am concerned. I H have retired for good and have no intention of challenging Hoover or any one clac."

Another International Battle This Week

A MERICAN golfers stopped them at Sandwich and now they have another battle on their hands with the Britons. The qualifying rounds of the U. S. open began at Chicago today and several of John Bull's sons drove off from the first tee this morning. It is doubtful if Hagen, Barnes and Hutchison will be able to finish in the same phenomenal fashion they did at Sandwich, but these three will be at the top or thereabouts when the final accounting is presented.

The fairways at Skokie are fast. Rain has been scarce and the greens are baked hard. Anything is likely to happen on such a course. Last week it was common for the golfers to come in with under-par scores, but in the strain of the tournament play it is not likely that low scores will prevail, .

THREE straight victories over Great Britain in England is not so bad, to put it mildly. Here's hoping the golfers at Skokie continue the streak.

Ambitious Youth vs. Veteran Champion

TOMMY LOUGHRAN'S friends are of one accord. They are so enthusiastic over the Philadelphia youth that they are confident he will knock Harry Greb loose from his crown when he opposes the champion at the Phillies' park tonight. Loughran's admirers hope he will, but there is an element of oubt and in some cases of fear.

Loughran is an ambitious youth whose confidence and skill should carry him a long way in his bout with the titleholder, but his inexperience must be reckoned with. Greb is a mad-rushing, swinging veteran, whose blows from all angles cut like a whip. Loughran's Apollo-like features are apt to get all mussed up, but if that's all that happens it will be well.

OUGHRAN is ambitious, which is good; he has confidence, which a is better, and he has perfect physical condition, which is best. But he lacks experience, which is a great handicap.
