POLICE ON STAND SCORE GINSBERG IN PAROLE QUIZ

Drug Peddler's Record Cited and He is Called One Who Would Not Reform

PREED PRISONER CALLED A CONSORT OF THIEVES

W. R. Nicholson, Jr., Who Made Charges That Started Inquiry, Fails to Appear

STEELE CALLED TO STAND

Refuses to Indorse Statement of Secretary of Law Enforcement League

"Izzy" Ginsberg's record, from the time a girl complained eight years ago that he had forced her to smoke opium and robbed her of her jewelry until he was sentenced to three years in prison as a drug peddler and user, was produced in court today in Judge Quigley's investigation of the parole he had granted the prisoner.

The records of the courts, as well as the word-of-mouth testimony of the chief of the vice squad and of detectives and police officers skilled in all the dark ways of the underworld, were produced to show that "Izzy" was not such a man as would be likely to "reform" after serving only fourteen months of a three-year sentence.

While the witnesses were calling on their knowledge of crime and criminals to damn "Izzy," they paid their respects to the character of his brother George, at whose instance, it is said, "Izzy's" parole was secured.

Inquiry in Common Pleas Court
The inquiry into the Ginsberg parole, an extraordinary court proceeding conducted by Judge Quigley as the man who had sentenced Ginsberg and afterward paroled him at the request of former Judge Patterson, was held in Common Pleas Court No. 1, Room B.

Former Judge Patterson, who took upon himself the responsibility for the Ginsberg parole, because he had urged Judge Quigley to grant it, was present and took an active part in the proceedings.

Joseph H. Taulane, former principal assistant District Attorney, appeared as the amicus curiae, or "friend of the court," to conduct the inquiry, and pursued his questions so relentlessly that John R. Keitt, who, with Ephraim Lipschutz appeared for Ginsberg, reminded him that he was "no longer District Attorney and ought not to conduct the hearing."

The inquiry purpose of the hearing, as Judge Quigley explained at its formal opening yesterday, is to arrive at the truth or falsity of insinuations that money had changed hands or that political influence had been used in obtaining the parole.

W. R. Nicholson, Jr., absent
There are a number of witnesses who had been subpoenaed who had been quoted in the newspapers as condemning the granting of the parole, and charging "Izzy" with "double-crossing."

The first and most important of these was William R. Nicholson, Jr., secretary of the Law Enforcement League. He was not present, as he is away on a vacation trip to the Green Lakes. His statement, credited to the Law Enforcement League, was the subject of many questions put to other witnesses. No one was willing to shoulder responsibility for the statement of the league.

The statement attributed to Mr. Nicholson branded the Ginsberg parole as "the greatest affair I ever heard of." He was quoted further as saying "why certain officials and former members of our judiciary should be so much interested in obtaining the release of such a notorious parolee is a great question upon which I am not qualified to answer."

Mr. Nicholson said he was quoted as asking: "What truth is there in reports that Ginsberg and his associates raised $15,000 to buy the parole? If there is so much smoke, where is the fire?"

Mr. Nicholson then demanded that Mayor Moore make a thorough investigation.

Nicholson, Sr., the First Witness
The first witness called was William R. Nicholson, Sr., president of the Land Title and Trust Company. The witness testified he was the father of William R. Nicholson, Jr.

The witness said his son had come to the Green Lakes, and he did not know how to locate him. Mr. Nicholson said he knew nothing about the activities in which his son was engaged.

PRINCIPALS IN LOS ANGELES "HAMMER" MURDER

HAMMER SLAYER BEGS FOR HUSBAND

Mrs. Phillips Loses Her Composure When Taken to Jail

Los Angeles, July 19.—Mrs. Clara Phillips, "the cave woman," went to jail yesterday after her arraignment on the charge of murder, gave way to hysteria, cried like a little girl afraid of the dark, and called continually for her husband.

It was after she had been snuggled back into the jail, after she had been taken to court and District Attorney Thomas Lee Woolwine had read the indictment charging her with "willfully, unlawfully, feloniously and with malice aforethought," beating Mrs. Albert Meadows to death with a ten-cent hammer.

Sheriff Traverser and others fought to take her through dense crowds which the police could not manage. She sobbed when she entered court. "There was a strained look on her face, terror in her eyes."

Outside the crowds were muttering, women were weeping. "They ought to hang her," "I hope they hang her," "She deserves hanging," and "She must be insane; no sane woman would do such a terrible thing in the first place; no sane woman would not as she does afterward."

But Dr. Louis Weber, alienist, employed by the State to examine the woman's mental condition, reported that he did not think she is at all insane.

The report was to be amplified later in a formal written communication going into the technicalities of the accused woman's mentality and her probable state of mind at the time she is alleged to have beaten Albert Meadows to death with a hammer.

At the same time relatives of Mrs. Albert Meadows were attending the funeral services of the church over her body in the undertaking rooms—and there were muttering crowds outside with no many exits. There would be those about the jail and the Hall of Records and Court House.

The minister had his theme—the damage done by lies, the gossip that linked the names of Mrs. Meadows and Mr. Phillips; the wagging tongue that had taken the life of an innocent girl and which might crush on the life of the numbers. And the crowd gave voice to these sentiments as the silver-gray casket was borne out to the hearse: "I hope they hang her," "Such a cold-blooded murder," "You'd think she'd show some mercy when the poor girl was down and begging," "And she smiles," "She lost her head, and I understand it isn't the first time"; "She ought to hang."

Advices Shown in Walkout to Be Law-Abiding

Washington, July 19.—(By A. P.)—An appeal was issued today by the Executive Council of the American Federation of Labor "to all workers everywhere to support the railroad workers in their efforts to secure a just settlement of the railroad shops' trades dispute."

The appeal, issued over the signatures of all members of the council, including Samuel Gompers, Federation president, has been forwarded to every labor organization in the United States, to every labor publication and to all organizations of the Federation.

Organized labor is asked specifically in the appeal to refrain from doing any work formerly done by men now on strike, while the workers on strike are engaged to conduct themselves in a law-abiding manner.

What is to the point, however, is that at the first court of his neighbors' eyes Mr. Donahue dove into the language and profaned the monster, silencing the skeptics thereby forever.

It is now on exhibition on Commission Row of Upper Darby Borough.

MAN KILLED IN WALL CAVE-IN

Another is Buried by Dirt and Rocks at Broad Street and Allegheny Avenue

ACCIDENT OCCURS ON OLD CONVENTION HALL SITE

Workman in Hospital is Badly Crushed and May Die

One workman was killed and another seriously injured at 11:25 o'clock this morning when the wall of a basement they were digging for a building on the site of the old Convention Hall, Broad street and Allegheny avenue, collapsed.

The dead man, who was smothered, was Joseph Scoppio, sixty-three, of 542 Rising Sun avenue.

August Merdo, 3852 First Sixth street, is in the Samaritan Hospital with internal injuries, which may prove fatal.

Scoppio and Merdo were digging with several other workmen fifteen feet below the street level on the north side of the building site. The wall which it had not been considered necessary to brace because it contained so much rock, fell without warning, burying Scoppio under tons of earth and stone and imprisoning Merdo.

Other workmen worked frantically to release Merdo and uncover Scoppio. The injured man was rushed first and unconscious. It was several minutes before the body of Scoppio was uncovered.

The operation was being done by the Bowen Construction Company, 1925 Chestnut street. Hugh H. Gibson, forty-first street and Maple avenue, superintendent in charge of the work, told the police that it had not been considered necessary to brace the wall.

ADVENTURE FADES; GIRL IS STRANDED
Ellen McKay, Missing From Ocean City, Lured by Bright Lights

The bright dreams of a gay city life that brought pretty sixteen-year-old Ellen McKay, of Ocean City, to Philadelphia ended in a hopeless wreck last night when she gave up the fight and appealed to the City Detective Bureau for help.

The girl walked into the Bureau shortly after midnight with the plea that she had lost all her money on her way to the train as she was returning to her home in Ocean City.

Detective Mowbray, in touch with the Ocean City police, was told by them that the girl had been missing since July 2.

Her mother, Mrs. P. T. Huston, said she had seen the girl in an auto, and she had been with her, Mrs. J. L. Fuller, to bring her home.

ROBBERS IN AUTO FOILED BY SHOTS
Bullets Hit Machine—Policeman Believes Fugitive Was Wounded

The neighborhood of Forty-sixth and Walnut streets was aroused at 3 o'clock this morning when a patrolman, firing his revolver as he ran, broke up a party of robbers who were trying to steal a car from a garage on the street as a bullet shattered the windshield of the speeding car. Several other shots fired at close range struck the machine, and police believe one of the highwaymen was wounded.

A "bunch" of Patrolman Miller, of the Fifty-fifth and Pine streets station, led the patrolmen to a garage on the street where they saw a man in an automobile stop in front of 3610 Walnut street as he was patrolling his beat.

MURDER CLUE HALTS VERDICT OF SUICIDE
Motorists Tell of Struggle Where Body of Man Was Found

A murder mystery has developed following the finding of the body of a man along the River road near Myrtle, N. J. Monday, who was first thought to have been a suicide.

Information given to Prosecutor Ward, of Cumberland County, today, led to the arrest of a party of motorists who were driving on the road at the point near where the body was found, and had taken one man, unconscious, to a hospital.

The man was found just as the coroner was ready to give a verdict of suicide. Every identifying mark had been removed from the body. The only possible clue that would have led to work on a street had found near the body, containing the address of "Eight and Filbert streets, Philadelphia."

The name of the makers of the hat had been torn out, which has led to the belief that the man was a Philadelphian.

The suicide theory was accepted at first because of the finding of a revolver in the trunk of the automobile, and a bullet wound in the right temple.

Runaway Wife's Romance Broken, She Takes Poison

Forgiven, Philadelphia Woman Lies in Wilmington Hospital After Writing "Forgive Me, Tom, I Could Not Help Myself"

Mrs. Thomas Everingham, twenty-three years old, is critically ill in a Wilmington hospital, expected to die, as the result of a shattered romance, into which the "eternal triangle" entered.

Until an early hour this morning her husband and two small children, who hurried to her bedside from their home at 478 Market street, this city, sat silently alongside the dying woman listening to her pleas for forgiveness.

Everingham interrupted his long vigil long enough to make a hurried trip to his home, after promising his wife that he would return as soon as possible. He left his two children, Ralph, four years old, and Alfred, two, with their mother.

The Everinghams were married seven years ago in a Minnesota village. They had been childhood playmates and sweethearts.

Six months ago Everingham lost his position in his home town and brought his pretty young wife and children to this city. Because of reduced circumstances they were forced to make the trip in Everingham's small motortruck. Upon their arrival he entered the express business.

Even the meager earnings from the operation of the motortruck failed to diminish the happiness of the couple. But after a short time they found it impractical to live in comfort without an added resource. Everingham and his wife took in a boarder, a young man, "Big Charlie," as he was known, was the Lochivar out of the West. In answer to an advertisement by Everingham he appeared one morning about two months ago and immediately made himself welcome in the modest home.

He said his name was Charles Thompson and had been a policeman in Chicago. Everingham had been planning to operate an express business. Meanwhile Mrs. Everingham did everything to make her boarder comfortable.

Several weeks ago Everingham became suspicious. He suspected that "Big Charlie" was becoming too familiar. Last Tuesday he returned to his home after an unusually busy day. He found the two little children playing on the parlor floor. On the table he found a note written by his wife. In it she told him that she had found her true mate in "Big Charlie," and that they were going away.

"Please forgive me, Tom," she wrote. "I cannot help myself."

Then she learned that "Big Charlie" was temporary, and when they arrived in Baltimore, he told her he already had a wife in the West. It would be best, he said, that they forget one another.

Mrs. Everingham left "Big Charlie" at the station and hurried home. But when she pleaded with her husband for forgiveness it was not to be had.

"Go away," shouted Everingham, "you love Charlie. You told me so in your letter."

Even fearful pleas from the young wife failed to gain a word of sympathy from her husband and she went away, leaving the two children behind.

Mrs. Everingham took refuge with a aunt in Wilmington, and tried to forget the past. Her only chance, however, was to wait for her husband. Finally the struggle became unbearable and Mrs. Everingham decided to end her life. She took poison.

"I'll give you another chance," Everingham said this morning. "I suppose Thompson took advantage of my frequent absences and wooed her away from me. I'm willing to forgive and begin over again."

BOOST IN TAX RATE SLUR ON KNICKERS SEEN BY GAFFNEY STARTS FIST FIGHT
Warns Appropriations to City Youth in Golf Togs at 16th and Departments Must Be Chestnut Sends Critic to Hospital

An increase in the tax rate for 1922 was predicted today by Chairman Gaffney, of Council's Finance Committee, unless additional appropriations to city departments were stopped immediately.

He sounded this warning at a meeting of the Finance Committee and reminded members that although the city now had a deficit of $1,275,000 there were additional demands from various departments aggregating $257,000.

The meeting was marked by numerous attacks between Councilman Hall and heads of various departments who made requests for more money.

The only department which met with approval of the Gaffney-Hall combination was that of the City Controller.

Halley Gets $1125
City Controller Halley appeared personally and asked for $1125 to employ men to reclassify records.

"You're the only department which lives within its appropriation," said Hall. Mr. Gaffney nodded approvingly. The request was granted.

Asked for $500 for additional printing required due to the increase in building construction. This was granted. A request for $6300 to purchase automobiles for surveys was refused.

Mr. Hall said the city was not using the cars it had now properly. He asserted that Assistant Director Wagner, Department of Public Works, had a car which stood idle all day. Hall said that the extra cars would not have been needed if more economic measures had been practiced.

It was at this point that Mr. Gaffney sounded the warning regarding the tax rate. He said: "I want to say to you gentlemen that you're now one-third quarter million behind, and if you continue the plan for additional appropriations you'll face the needle with an increased tax rate for 1922." He urged more strict economy in all city departments.

GOVERNORS BACK HARDING'S PLAN TO OPEN MINES

Executives of Eight Coal-Producing States Pledge President Hearty Co-operation

READY TO AID GOVERNMENT IF EMERGENCY ARISES

Operators Requested to Resume Work and Promised Ample Protection

LODGE APPEALS TO PEOPLE
Lewis, Undisturbed, Declares Union Miners Will Not Return to Work

Washington, July 19. Replies from Governors of coal-producing States, who were called on yesterday by President Harding to co-operate with the Federal Government in protecting mines at which operations are resumed, began today to pour into the White House. Most of the Governors said that they would support the Federal policy if any emergency should arise and outlined their plan for doing so.

Texts of replies received from Governors follow:

Governor Morrow, Kentucky: "Replying to your telegram I will issue tonight (Tuesday) in the form of a proclamation a request to all mine operators to open their mines and to all miners to return to their employment or to seek employment when the mines are open, and in giving full assurance to all persons serving that every power of the State will be used whenever and wherever necessary to maintain law and order, and to protect every citizen in the undisturbed exercise of this constitutional right. Your confidence and opinion is unquestionably correct and should be unhesitatingly pursued. I will support and maintain it."

Governor McFray, of Indiana: "Telegrams forwarded to the Indiana mine operators have been invited to resume mining operations. Ample protection will be given to protect life and property."

Hardwick, Issues Proclamation
Governor Hardwick, of Georgia: "I have your telegram of this afternoon, have carefully read its contents and agree heartily with you. This morning I issued a proclamation calling on all law-abiding citizens to obey the laws and to preserve peace and order. I have sent out a demand for the Governor of West Virginia, to quell disturbance there and to preserve order. I have notified all peace and police officers of this State to preserve order and to keep down disturbances and have promised them military aid whenever necessary. I believe the National Guard of Georgia will be adequate for that purpose. Protection of persons and property is sufficient for all present needs. Government and the State government of Georgia stands squarely with you and will cooperate fully with the Federal authorities to maintain and preserve order. You may count on full, prompt and whole-hearted cooperation from me."

Governor Kendall, Iowa: "As Chief Executive of Iowa, I pledge every effort to support the policy of the program you have inaugurated for the relief of the coal situation."

Governor Sloan, Colorado: "As Governor of Colorado, I will co-operate with President Harding and the Federal authorities to the fullest extent."

Governor Mechem, New Mexico: "All coal mines are operating and production is sufficient for all present needs. Governor Hart, Washington: "I beg to advise you there is no trouble in this State, and I have faith in the operators and miners that no condition prejudicial to a demand for Federal interference will arise."

Governor Hyde, of Missouri, informed the President he would take immediate steps to begin production of coal in his State.

The situation in Illinois was rendered uncertain because of the absence of Governor Small from the State.

Lodge Appeals to People
Committee with the presence of the replies from the Governors, Senator Lodge, of Massachusetts, in a formal statement, urged "all patriotic Americans to sustain the President" in his program for dealing with the coal strike.

"President Harding asked, as President Roosevelt asked in 1902, the mine owners and the miners to arbitrate their differences," said Senator Lodge. "A majority of the coal owners probably will do so. The miners refused. The President has now requested that the mines be opened and proposes that all who are willing to work be protected to the fullest extent, if necessary by all the forces of the States and Nation. It seems the plan is to open the mines and to give the patriotic Americans to sustain the President's continued reservation or purpose that will still be fifteen gallons of moonshine."

SUSPEND PATROLMAN AS A BOOTLEGGER
Still Found When Martin Kennedy's Home Was Searched
Patrolman Martin Kennedy, of the Twentieth and Federal streets station, was suspended today on charges of bootlegging. His case probably will go to the Federal authorities.

Lieutenant Gallagher, commanding the district, was notified through an anonymous letter that Kennedy was running a still at his home, 111 South Twenty-fourth street, and was selling whisky to his acquaintances. The lieutenant and two detectives visited the Kennedy home and found not merely the still but fifteen gallons of moonshine.

Kennedy was formerly a saloonkeeper at Twenty-first and Federal streets.
