By GEORGE NOX MCCAIN

Chicago, July 22.—The reversal of Federal Judge Page's decision by the Appellate Court in the now famous Pennsylvania Railroad case has been the only topic of discussion in railroad and labor circles here for the last forty-eight hours.

Sharing with the decision in interest is the conference held in Washington today between President Harding and Ben W. Hooper, chairman of the Labor Board, who left here for Washington yesterday when summoned by the President.

The decision of the United States Circuit Court of Appeals reversing Judge Page's recent ruling that the board is not an integral part of the Government, has met with little favor on either side.

The occasion for the decision, it will be recalled, was the Pennsylvania Railroad's request for an injunction to restrain the Labor Board from publishing a report that the railroads have violated an order of the board.

In other words, it prevented a denunciation of the board by the railroads, inaugurating its scheme of handling its labor questions independent of the board.

Can Sue for Pay

The view generally taken is that the decision decides nothing except that the board was right and the railroad was wrong.

"It means that any employee can sue his railroad for the amount of money he has lost as a result of reduction in pay," said an attaché of the board, with considerable confidence in his tone.

"But suppose the Pennsylvania Railroad are receiving more pay, or as much as they ever did, formerly, where does it leave you?" I asked.

"The gentleman threw up both hands in a pantomime of surrender, and the attaché, smiling, with the admission, 'I've nothing to say.'"

"At headquarters of the striking shopmen some pointed inquiries on the subject of the board's action brought out the information that it was regarded as a victory for the men. When I called for plans and specifications this was what was said:

"It is a moral victory. The court has sustained the Labor Board. It clothes it with the power to put the Pennsylvania Railroad where it belongs. That is a victory for the employees."

"In what respect?" I asked the official with whom I was conversing.

"It establishes the authority which enables it to denounce the Pennsylvania Railroad, to demand the return of the world of labor and men. Of course," the official continued, "it still leaves the board without power to enforce decisions. That's all it has'n't any teeth. If it had, it would have been ended within a week after it was declared."

Different Ox Gored

The irony of his remark did not apparently enable it to denounce the Pennsylvania Railroad. The ancient adage that "It depends upon whose ox is hurt" is applicable.

GUARDSMEN OFF AS BANDS BLARE

Several Thousand Entrain Ready for Both Business and Pleasure

SCENES ARE COLORFUL AT RAILROAD STATIONS

Sweethearts, Wives, Cousins and Aunts Bid Fond Ones Tender Farewell

Equipped for both pleasure and business, several thousand soldiers of the National Guard marched from their troop headquarters in this city this morning to the accompaniment of cheers and music and entrained for Mount Gretna, "and other points."

The 1034 Cavalry was the first to arrive at camp. Detachments of the 111th Infantry reached Mount Gretna a short time later.

The tinge of romance and heroism which goes with the life of a soldier was much in evidence at each of the railroad stations. The inspiring music of regimental bands and of bugle and drum gave the proper martial spirit to some of the marching men while others left without this popular melody for the various entraining points.

While many of the men left with smiles on their faces they made it plain that they were prepared to take things as they came—whether it be a continuous excursion at Mount Gretna or more serious business with mutinous miners who ignored the law.

Rock and stones were hurled early today near Monongahela City at the train carrying the advance detachments of National Guardsmen to the soft-coal regions of Western Pennsylvania.

Train Held Up Till Daylight

The Guardsmen deployed for several hundred yards in the valley around the railroad line but the stone throwers were not caught. After a fifteen-minute delay the train proceeded, but again was stoned. A second search for the assailants also was fruitless.

Troopers Hooted and Boomed

All along the line, the troopers were hooted and booed by miners and their families, but they kept strict discipline throughout the trip, and there were no clashes.

Headquarters at Washington

Colonel Edward J. Stackpole, Jr., commander of the 104th Cavalry, met his men as they detrained at Cokesburg Junction. The colonel established headquarters last night at Washington, Pa., but will have field headquarters as long as the troops are in service.

Some of the largest bituminous mines in Southwestern Pennsylvania are in the region where the main body of troops camped.

Major Edgar C. McKinney, second in command in the strike zone, established headquarters at Ebensburg, Cambria County. His outfit will consist of the first squadron, headquarters troop, Troop A, New Castle, and one half of the motor transport troop.

At East Conemaugh he will have Troop B, 104th Cavalry; Troop A, of the Machine Gun Squadron, Troop C, of the 104th, and Troop B, of the Fifty-second Cavalry Brigade Machine Gun Squadron.
