Weighing gives us the most exact de-termination of the actual mass of things. The life-sustaining value of foods or the heating value of fuels depends upon the actual mass rather than on the space and is therefore more reliable than tereauring, which does not take into consideration the air spaces between ir-gibaket. Weighing also affords a means of arriving at the value of things which cannot be measured, such as livestock. Tomorrow-Why Are Aldermen and Mayors So Called?
