Another example of what faithful and earnest practice, along with love for the game will do toward making for success, is brought to light in the pold rise of Miss Emma Sauter, young and promising mermaid of the Philadelphia Turngemeinde.

This youngster, for she is only seven m years of age, has risen to very near the top ranks in aquatics, and through erious and constant effort to attain record which far eclipses those of nore than one girl many years her

Emma derived so much enjoyment out of splashing around in the water that was not long before she began to hink seriously of taking up swimming as her one hig sport. What she wanted was to join a club where she could wim all year round.

Coached by Braun At that time Miss Sauter was barely past thirteen years of age. She knew very little alout the fine points of swimming. But she went up to the Turners and enrolled under the tu elage of Charley Braun.

Braun realized that Emma's confidence in herself and pure love for swim-ming in itself was enough to do wonders for the girl, so he set her to work t once on the various strokes and fancy dives. It took very little time to get ber ready for her grand entrance into the field of actual competition, and in the latter part of 1919 the little mer-maid, then not quite fourteen, was started on a career which was to net ber eighteen medals in less than three years' time. Miss Sauter's first race was a 100-pard free-style handicap held under the auspices of the Meadowbrook Athletic Club in the pool at Broad and Oxford streets. Emma carned her first medal, winning second place against a large field of girls, representing the best in
