Nancy Wynne Says There Were Gay Doings in the Social World at All Times-Members of Younger Set Approve of Her Plea for More Chaperonage

It only confirms what I have always believed, and several times have given voice to in this column, that the young people are right-thinking themselves. Of course, they are thoughtless; that goes with youth, but they are frank and traightforward and innately good, and the fact that certain ones among them have let themselves be common. forward and vulgar is no reason why all should be condemned.

It is a fact that in all ages and times there have been certain members in certain sets who have overstepped the mark, and there have always been others who so too far the other way and see evil where it does not exist. They are usually the ones who make all the talk and furore about it. I still maintain that the parents of today should be more careful about their sons and daughters' associates, and there should be more chaperonage. Not a chaperonage that makes the younger people think they are being watched: that would be very poor; but the kind of chaperonage that puts even the thought of "necking," "petting parties" and such doings out of the ques-

HAPPENED to be one of a group of people who were discussing these matters recently and one of the mothers, who is very careful of her daughters, moke up: "I don't think it's quite fan to condemn the younger generation, as very one does now. I remember a lot of girls who were very 'fast and flip' the year I came out.

And another said: "Yes, do you remember Marian L——? I'll never forget, one day, when I stopped there to see her sister; she said she'd walk home with me. There was a students' boarding house on the way to my home, and as we passed there she began to look into the windows and giggle, and the first thing I knew one of them came out and spoke to us. It was the first time I had ever had such a thing happen, and I was furious, and gave the man a terrific call down. And I found out afterward that Marian was in the habit of flirting with those strangement of the strangement of the strangement.

ladies, who had all passed four-score years, sat quietly by listening. Then one, whose dear old face was full of mischief, leaned forward and remarked to one of the others: "I guess the world does not change much. Do you remember the parties we used to have at the L—'s on Fourth street, those fancy parties when every one went in such queer clothes? Remember the night when Mr. R— came as a centaur and Aunt S— was so shocked?"

"Yes," said the others."

Pauline Frederick is one of those certain that she'll rise to any scene confronting her, and do it instinctively and perfectly. Unfortunately, the screen has comparatively few such thespians. The reason is that the screen recruits from peculiar places and often omits schooling and long years of rigorous training. Beauty contests, musical revues, cowboy outfits and marital scandal are not especially likely to be productive of great acting.

That's why people like Skinner, Arliss, Elsie Ferguson, the Barrymores, Polly Frederick and Roberts always have that air of assurance and complete detachment from directoral complete detachment from director must be concent.

From Figure 1 in the variation house for delicate children the Childrens' Seashore House now not only carries out that work but has added the more serious and possibly the more useful work of caring for and often the curing of crippled children. At present there are at the home more than four there are at the home more than four hundred little cripples and other invalided children. Many prominent young girls, residents of Ventuer's summer colony, spend several hours each day at the Seashore Home, amusing and reading to the little ones.
