the Weightman family this year-Aubrey Weightman's daughter, and a most attractive deb she will be. The date for her party has not been definitely settled, but she is to be introduced by her father and stepmother in the fall. Fannie is a great-granddaughter of the late William Weightman, the multi-millionaire, who built the house at Eighteenth and Walnut streets, now occupied by the George H. McFaddens. Mr. Aubrey Weightman's father was a brother of William Weightman, Jr., whose wife married Mr. Jones Wister some years after Mr. Weightman's death, and Mrs. Penfield, of New York, is therefore Fannie's great nunt.

I know them from Mrs. Duane and during the Wilson Administration. Mrs. Benjamin Coates, who was Miss Anna Morris, is a sister.

I do not know why I seem to insist on writing about Dolly and Babs as if they were connected or special great friends. They are friends, of course, but are not especially intimate. The real reason for it all is that they are both abroad and are both sailing for home scen home soon.

Babs Clayton's sister Mary married Ralph Earle, and they are at present in their cottage in Ventnor. They have the most fascinating bungalow there. It's a boathouse on the thoroughfare, and they can go canoeing right from their porch. /

WONDERED if I could maintain my attitude that the younger set was innately right in its moral tenets the face of a letter I received from an interested and outraged mother the other day. She had gone with her children to an invitation subscription dance in the suburbs recently and had seen some of the girls going out between dances, sitting in the cars out-ide with the boys and actually paraking of the drinkables brought by the boys in their hip pockets. This is true and I have heard of it from several other mothers who took their daughters nome carly in the evening when they saw how things were going. But I can taintain my attitude because of this. Again it was for want of proper chaperonage that such things went on. Oh, yes, there were chaperons there, but it known the chaperons were doing the self-same thing. Am I not there-fore correct in blaming the elders for much that is said about the younger

You cannot expect boys and girls, no matter how well bred, to behave prop-erly if their elders give them an example of freedom from restraint and manners and are satisfied to have the children copy them.

It seems to me that it is high time we elders paused a bit and took stock of ourselves. If the present and coming generation is not what it and if luxury and lack of self-denial bring this country of ours to ruin, the cause is going to date back to this year and the years before this, too. No one believes in fun more than I do, but why can't we have the right kind of fun, which exercises our minds as well as our bodies? Are we to grow up utterly witless because there is no one who takes time to think? The thoughtlessness of the times is to me a more serious thing than anything else. Lo let us think and then act.

THEY were practicing for the wed-This, were practicing for the wed-ding-going up and down the aisle accordingly as the father and mother of the bride, and the parents of the bridegroom thought they should, and then as the ushers thought they should, and then us some one else had seen done at another wedding. Finally the pro-cession part was satisfactorily arranged.

cession part was satisfactorily arranged, and then came the rehearsal by the chancel. Of course the clergyman was present and added a few words of advice bimself. When the bride and her father reached the chancel the bridegroom ad-mared to meet her. "And why are you standing there?" asked the elergyman. The be it known Mr. Bridegroom adession part was satisfactorily arranged.

Chelsea. Mrs. J. Williams, Miss Rose Corkill, Miss Kathleen Conley, Miss Kathleen Mullin, Mr. James Williams, Jr., and Mr. Thomas McCormick motored to Chelsea the early part of this week. WHAT newspapers really are are hundreds of thousands of eyes and ears, on watch in every quarter of the globe for happenings which trained ob-servers know will be interesting. Because of the newspapers, the Great War was followed even more closely in Fort Worth, Tex., than it was near the hattle line, for news from all parts of the front could be gathered in time to send to Forth Worth, while news only of a limited field of action could more to the troops

the newspapers are looking and listen-ing ready to tell their readers about it. Wherever big events are about to happen, the newspapers send eyes and ears to see and hear and tell to the readers as soon as presses can turn and papers can be distributed.
