Dear Cynthia-I am a young lady of nineteen years and have lived opposite a young man about four years my senior for about six years, who during a young man about four years my senior for about six years, who during all this time was in our house about two times, just to listen to our phonograph, because he likes music. I really don't have much to say to this gentleman, but once in a while, the two of us do keep a short, conversation, just like all neighbors would do. I sometimes go out with his sister, who is indeed very beautiful, still we wouldn't be called intimate friends, because I hardly ever go in her house. Well, the reason I think a whole lot about the fellow of whom I write, is because he seems to be just the type of a man I like, but I ofttimes wonder if he really wants somebody who is pretty like his sister, because he does take her out quite often. I myself am not considered homely, but anyway. I am not very pretty either, I am sure that this fellow is too sensible to care for good looks as much as all that, so maybe there is a chance for me. Cynthia, could you tell me how to go about things in order to make this fellow notice me more, and to give me more attention than he does? I love him, but he is unaware of the fact.

The Wife Cheater THE HOME IN GOOD TASTE By HAZEL DEYO BATCHELOR By Harold Donaldson Eberlein

Joan Stockbridge marries Norman Wayne in spite of many warnings from her friends. She chooses him in preference to Herbert Livingston who loves her devotedly, but who lacks Norman's charm. Norman is the kind of man who has never been known to care for one woman more than a few weeks at a time, and after their marriage, he makes Joan mis-crable through his attentions to other comen. When Edith, Joan's younger sister, comes to visit them, a flirtation develops between Norman and her, and it is then that Herbert Living-ston comes to Joan's rescue. He is ready to dance attendance on her, and Joan likes him better than she over has before, although his seriousness troubles her whenever she stops to think about it.
