improved. How undreamed-of features had been developed to bring a new gracefulness, a new luxury, a new comfort to each piece of furniture.

The furniture of today—as found in this Wanamaker Sale bears out the art of its "period" to the finest detail, but it brings something more. It is solid, substantial and serviceable, yet proportioned for the modern apartment as well as house; it is fashioned for comfort and ease and it introduces a mechanical completeness and variety not known when the old masters were building their famous models.

The craftsmen who created the style of Louis XVI would certainly find a rare and fascinating interest in this Ivory Enameled Bedroom Suit in that style, which we offer in the sale at $1743.

The maker of this suit specializes in enamel work, and in this field he has no equal to our knowledge.

This is as fine an example of modern meled furniture as money can buy

It is hand decorated in floral pattern done in natural colors.

The lines and proportioning of each piece are a triumph of harmony. What is known as the "casework," that is the interior cabinet work, is an equally unmistakable triumph of

And speaking of Chippendale and Sheraton, how either one of the old masters would be impressed by the way his work is perpetuated in the collection of fine dining-room suits shown on the Sixth Floor, Market

One Sheraton suit in particular is uncommonly true to type. Ten pieces, in fine light-colored mahogany veneers with oblong table, and chair-backs showing Windsor turnings and a wheel-like or pierced oval device set in a rectangular frame. The reduced price is $935.

A ten-piece Chippendale suit in fine mahogany veneers is one of many that would interest Thomas by its rich carvings, typical cabriole legs, well-proportioned oblong table and generally fine lines. Now marked $1260.

What a sale it is in which these finely individual suits, worthy of the golden ages of cabinet making, can be bought at the same relative price advantages that prevail over the less expensive suits and pieces, of which we show an assortment without precedent or a parallel.
