Letters to the Editor

"An Iridescent Dream"

To the Editor of the Evening Public Ledger:

Sir—John J. Ingalls, once United States Senator from Kansas, made use of the expression "an iridescent dream" in describing something—I've forgotten exactly what it was. But might it not be accurately applied in this year of grace 1922 to Woodrow Wilson's vision of a community of nations? That great man, whose luminous place in history is assured as anything in mortal life can be, declared in the days of the World War and the period immediately succeeding, when he was the dominant figure at the Versailles Peace Congress, that the evil old-style diplomacy must be discarded and that a new diplomacy of brotherhood and altruism must be established. The statesmen of Europe applauded and agreed.

Woodrow Wilson could not make the dream come true. At home his plan was rejected. In Europe the leaders kept on talking about Wilsonian diplomacy, but as soon as the personal influence of the American President was eliminated they quietly resumed the work of building fences quite in the old-fashioned way. Now they have even ceased to talk about the excellence of Wilsonism, and instead of working furtively they are out squarely in the open with their deals, their combines, their swappings and grabbings and manipulations.

France was the last nation to give up the Wilson ideals. She stood for a square deal for Poland, for Jugo-Slavia. But she did not follow Wilson in extending kindly consideration to Germany. Finally she smirched her record by espousing the cause of the Angora Turks and trying to arrange in the Near East deals advantageous to herself and disadvantageous both to her allies and to the Levantine peoples.

Italy was for Wilsonism except when it interfered with her own preconceived plans for aggrandizement. When Wilsonism demanded an ethnic boundary for Greater Italy the Italians cast Wilsonism aside. And because she believes her advantage lies in some kind of rapprochement with Germany and in friendly dealings with the Russian Bolsheviki she has steadily seconded the designs of England.

The Welshman who rules England was vociferous in his expressions of devotion to the new diplomacy while he was working late at night on schemes to re-establish the old diplomacy. With varying success England has opposed France on every issue. The Entente has become a lifeless body. It has not been put in the tomb, but it walks without animation and without hope.

Germany watches with interest and satisfaction the rending of the nations and the schemes and counter-schemes of the professional diplomats. It all means advantage to Germany. The time may come in the not distant future when Germany will be found safely united with England and Italy in a new and amazing triple entente.

Meanwhile France, refusing the isolation to which she has been consigned by the machinations of former allies and foes, has not been idle in tying together batches of smaller nations, and with Belgium as her warm friend has a very respectable following.

So the game goes on. It is not a merry game or a very clean one; it is, in fact, both grim and disreputable. But it is being played by masters, and in time the peoples of Europe will have to pay the stakes.

Only four years ago the world was at war. Three years ago the nations, under the inspiration of Woodrow Wilson, were promising that there would be no more war, and were proclaiming great principles as godly as the Golden Rule. How soon the world has forgotten both the horror and the hope! How iridescent the dream of the former President of the United States!

THE MAN FROM HOME.
Lancaster, Pa., September 14, 1922.

Getting Back the Letter

To the Editor of the Evening Public Ledger:

Sir—Have you ever written a letter, and changed your mind, and then destroyed the letter? Of course you have, and so has every one. Sometimes, though, you have mailed that letter before changing your mind. Then you are not happy. Whatever the reason, such a letter is a source of worry. Now comes Dr. Hubert Work, Postmaster General, with relief for those who are so troubled. Under his recent ruling it will be possible to get such a letter out of the clutches of Uncle Sam. All the writer has to do is to notify the postmaster in time that such a missive has been mailed, and furnish reasonable proof of having written it. Then it will be returned, and, in cases of emergency, such a letter will be halted en route by a telegram to the railway mail clerk.

How much of trouble this will save in the world is beyond estimation, but surely it will help to quiet the qualms of many an uneasy letter writer. Folks may now change their minds with comparative safety, because Dr. Work, continuing the humanizing of the post-office, begun so well under Will H. Hays, has provided for the interruption of epistolary blunders before it is too late.

Which in a way revives an old story told of a famous statesman of "the good old days," who made the boast that he never wrote a letter on an important political matter. "I know you never did," responded an envious rival. "It would cost you two cents to send a letter, and you can travel for nothing on a pass."

Reaping the Whirlwind

To the Editor of the Evening Public Ledger:

Sir—The plight of unhappy Greece, again bled white by war even before her wounds resulting from the recent world conflict have had time to heal, affords a striking and tragic illustration of "sowing the wind and reaping a whirlwind."

When the World War ended the reins of the Greek Government were in the hands of Premier Venizelos, who, following the abdication of King Constantine, had piloted his nation throughout the conflict from which it emerged victorious and in the most advantageous position in the family of nations it had held within a century.

During the period of world-wide unrest, social disorder and political tumult incident to post-war readjustment, Venizelos—a towering figure, universally recognized as being one of the leading statesmen of the times, and enjoying the confidence and the highest respect of all of the triumphant allied nations—was overthrown by his constituents and virtually banished from the land.

Like Aristides the Just, he was denounced and stripped of authority for no other apparent reason than that the Greek people could no longer stand hearing him universally acclaimed for his greatness.

When Venizelos fell the leadership of Greece was restored to Constantine, brother-in-law of the former German Kaiser, who, with his household, had been driven from the country during the war because of his sympathy with the Central Powers and disloyalty to the cause of the Allies.

From that day to this the Greek Government has suffered grievously by reason of its lack of the confidence, sympathy and co-operation of the nations with which it, under the progressive, statesmanlike leadership of Venizelos, had fought the war and participated in the allied victory over the enemies of democracy and civilization.

Now with the victorious Turk replacing the Cross with the Crescent in the territory wrested from him centuries ago by the Moslem and restored by the Peace Conference, generally Greece is in the valley of humiliation, her armies overthrown, her king in eclipse and the figure of Venizelos again looming as the only salvation of the Hellenes. The sowing of the wind by the brother-in-law of the ex-Kaiser and his satellites has been followed by the reaping of the whirlwind.

Farm Aids March to Prosperity

To the Editor of the Evening Public Ledger:

Sir—Based on farm prices as of September 1, the Department of Agriculture calculates that the value of crops in the United States this year is $1,250,000,000 over that of 1921. In view of the fact that the total yield of some of the principal crops is considerably less than a year ago, the statement is indicative of a healthy recovery in farm values.

The yield of the principal crops is most imposing. Corn retains its place as king of farm products, with an estimated total yield of 2,875,000,000 bushels, valued at $1,801,900,000 on September 1. Hay is second of the great billion-dollar trinity, with a value for wild and tame of $1,160,200,000. Cotton comes third, with a total estimated value of $1,064,400,000. To the value of the cotton will be added finally the income from the seed, which may bring the total worth of the crop above that for hay. Wheat is set down for a contribution of 720,600,000 to the grand total oats adds $404,100,000; potatoes bring $385,400,000, and apples $227,200,000, and other yields come in order, making up a grand total of $6,600,000,000.

These figures are of service because they afford a reasonable starting point for calculating the condition of the greatest of basic industries. They are well below the showing of the war peak, but are the more dependable because they are down. Something approaching stability has been attained in the matter of world consumption, and this will be reflected in the market.

All around, the report from the department is encouraging, for it means that the march of prosperity in the United States is not going to be halted because of short crops or prices that are below the profit line.

Letters to the Editor should be as brief and to the point as possible, avoiding anything that would open a denominational or sectarian discussion.

No attention will be paid to anonymous letters. Names and addresses must be signed as an evidence of good faith, although names will not be printed if request is made that they be omitted.

The publication of a letter is not to be taken as an indorsement of its views by this paper.

Communications will not be returned unless accompanied by postage, nor will manuscript be saved.

Questions Answered

Marriage License Laws in 3 States

To the Editor of the Evening Public Ledger:

Sir—Please give me the following information through the People's Forum column:

In the States of Maryland, Delaware and New York are marriage licenses issued to non-residents without identification by a third person living in the city in which application is made?

Must both parties appear to make application in each of the States mentioned? Could an affidavit be substituted?

Are such licenses good immediately after issuance in any State? Can they be used in other cities or counties than in those in which they have been issued?

Is the granting of marriage licenses published in the newspapers in all the three States mentioned?

Philadelphia, September 14, 1922.

In Maryland a marriage license may be obtained by either party to the contract or a friend or a hired attorney who can answer the required questions under oath and sign the affidavit as the applicant. Identification is not required. Persons receiving a license may be married at once. Parental consent is not necessary when the man is twenty-one and the woman sixteen.

In Delaware the law makes special discrimination against non-residents, who must obtain a license ninety-six hours before marriage is permissible; the license for non-residents must be procured from the clerk of the peace only, while in the case of residents it is issued by justices of the peace, as well as the clerk of the peace, and is obtainable twenty-four hours before marriage. Both applicants for license when non-residents must make the application, answering questions under oath, and a record is at once made, which is open to the public.

In New York both contracting parties must appear and answer questions under oath, either before the city clerk in small towns and cities or the marriage license clerk in the department of the city clerk of New York City in the Municipal Building. Marriage may take place as soon as the license is procured. Identification is not necessary.

A marriage license issued in one State is not good in another State.

Publication of the licenses in the newspapers is not mentioned in the laws, and is a matter for every newspaper to determine for itself.

THE DOO DADS—Doc Sawbones' Pie Shop

—By Arch Dale

Pies! Great juicy ones—sweet, tasty raisin ones; Dutch apple ones, with strips across the top and nutmeg and cinnamon sprinkled on top and cherry ones with flaky crust and the most delicious of well ripened cherries inside. Such pies! And they all came from Doctor Sawbones' Pie Shop that has just opened today.

Because it is the opening day, a pie is given free to every customer. And what a shop it is! Roly and Poly are at the mixing vat, where the flour and lard and salt and water and baking powder is worked into the dough that, when baked, becomes the flakiest of crust for Doctor Sawbones' famous pies. With his long handled ladle, Roly dips up the dough and pours it onto the kneading board, where a master baker works it and feeds it into the rolling machine. Roly is so busy quarreling with Poly that he is making the master all mussy with the dough from the ladle—and he is working so fast that the baker cannot take care of the dough and it is running off the sides of the board and has formed a great pool on the floor.

Old Man Grouch is at the crank, and keeps lifting one foot and then the other. He fears that the dough will dry and he will be stuck fast to the floor. But look at the nice even stream of dough that slides down the platform from the roller—and as it comes, Old Nicholas Nutt, with a huge cleaver, cuts the strip into nice square cakes which are passed from hand to hand until they are placed on the table of the "crust cutter."

The "crust cutter" is an expert workman and holds in his two hands the patented cutter. As each square is placed on the table he pounces upon it for all the world like a little boy trying to catch a butterfly with his hat—and makes of the squares of dough, nice round ones which are fitted into the pans and placed on another table under the filling spout.

Here, really, is the secret of Doctor Sawbones' famous pies. The little fellow who operates the filler is a master baker and a master mechanic besides.

When the pies are baked to a turn, old Sleepy Sam fishes them out with his long-handled shovel, and one on top of the other, places them on the delivery trucks. See the little Doo Dads eagerly waiting, and what a great hurry the little fellow, that is delivering the pies, is in. The little mouse on the flour sack is enjoying it all very much and the pup and Mr. Bug are hoping that some scraps will be dropped—and then they will have a feast.
