John Steele takes Anne Temple home with him on the stormy night when he finds her asleep in his taxi. Marcia Steele. John's mother, is afraid of the girl's elfin appeal, and the fact that she refuses to tell anything about her past. But in spite of Harcia's opposition. Steele falls desperately in love with the girt and determines to make her his wife.

Friendship

SINCE that night when Steele had asked Anne to give him the life dust she valued so little he had made no attempt to see her. It was perhaps the most difficult period of his life, for he was not accustomed to delays, and the restraint that he put upon himself made him restless and Irritable. But he was determined to wait, and wait he did. Every day Anne gallied in strength until finally there came a time when it was no longer necessary for her to remain in her room. She was still very fragile and Dr. Henderson, when questioned by Marcia, pointed out the danger of allowing the girl to take up any definite work as yet. Rest is what she needs, and an absonce of responsi-bility of any kind. In autioned. And Marcia was forced to smile and acquiesce when in her wart she wanted only to be rid of Anne ferever.

Steele had said nothing more to his mother about his atentions concerning Anne, therefore it was with some trepi-

But although she had chosen the simplest things, and Anne's dress that night was a straight one-piece frock of sheer white, her beauty was frock of sheer white, her beauty was a straight one-piece frock of sheer white, her beauty was almost dazzling, and Steele caught his breath as she entered the room.

But his greeting was entirely with-out emotion of any kind save kindly interest. He wanted to put her at her case, to convince her that she had nothing to fear from him, and after one quick look into his eyes, the tension of the office without telling her where he was going. He would not tell her a thing about this big business that he was engaged are being so much exploited nowadays. Red Band Luncheon Dinner It Does

Triple Duty There is hardly a limit to the variety of pleasing ways in which Beardsley's Shredded

Codfish can be prepared. As a result it does triple duty for many women-breakfast, luncheon and dinner. There are many tempting ways to use Shredded

Codfish other than in the well known codfish ball-au gratin, deviled, timbale, fritters, en casserole, creamed, and a la creole are a few of the attractive ways of preparing luncheon and dinner dishes.

Beardsley's Shredded Codfish is so easy and quick to prepare. In from ten to fifteen minutes, you can have a meal ready for five people. And this is from one packagecosting fifteen cents.

Ask your grocer today for Beardsley's Shredded Codnsh. The box with the red band. Ask him, too, for our book of recipes, "The Daily Question". You will find it a help.
