STRAIGHT FOOTBALL

DESPITE the heavy downpour and the discomfort of wet clothing suffered during the Penn-University of the South game on Franklin Field Saturday, it was a satisfied band of 20,000 odd spectators that filed out of the exits of the new stadium after the game.

They had come to see a football game and were not disappointed in the least. Penn had won and, in so doing, had brought to the fore all the thrills that mark a real gridiron contest. Sewance lost to the tune of 27 to 0, but the Southerners put up as game a battle against odds that has been seen on the historic field in a number of years.

It was the first contest ever staged between these two institutions, the Sewanec team having been North to play but once before, and that time in 1919, when they were defeated by Princeton at Tigertown. However, they placed themselves in the hearts of Philadelphia fans Saturday by their hard, clean fans Saturday by their hard, clean playing and the sturdy defense against
